Stoner is himself presently under indictment in U. S. District Court in Birmingham for obstruction of justice in connection with the desegregation of the Birmingham schools in September, 1963;

Copies made by
for review by Rowe Task Force

Although worried about the indictment, Stoner has been spewing out brazen lies in a frantic effort to discredit the Bureau. In a news article in "The Birmingham News," 10/20/63, Stoner was quoted as "predicting" to the NSRP rally at Mount Olive, Alabama, that the NSRP would one day come to power and that all FBI Agents would be tried for treason. Stoner said he suspected the FBI instigated the bombing of the 16th Street Baptist Church because the whites were winning the legal struggle before the blast, and accused the FBI of trying to spot all white resistance to let "the black mobs led by Martin Luther King and Fred L. Shuttlesworth take over and drive the whites out." Stoner charged the FBI was responsible for the Little Rock Bombings through efforts of an undercover agent, attacked the Director as a "black devil from Hell," and described FBI Agents as dirty, slimy traitors.

Seibels Brands King A 'Contemptible Liar'

Grenier To Work Fulltime For Goldwater Candidacy

WASHINGTON, D.C., Oct. 24—Peter O'Donnell, Jr., Chairman of the National Draft Goldwater Committee, today announced that John E. Grenier has accepted the position of Regional Director covering eleven southern states: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Mr. Grenier will continue to serve in his present capacity as Republican State Chairman of Alabama.

In 1962 Grenier managed the Senate campaign for Jim Martin against Lister Hill. Martin got 49.6 percent of the vote.

Mr. Grenier is a practicing attorney in Birmingham. He is taking a leave of absence from his law firm to serve full time to advance the candidacy of Senator Goldwater.

"We are very fortunate to have John Grenier accept this all-important position," O'Donnell said. "He brings demonstrated organizational ability, campaign know-how, plus the enthusiasm and dedication that will insure success for Senator Goldwater's nomination and election."

Mr. Grenier is a native of New Orleans, Louisiana. He received a Bachelor of Laws Degree in 1954 from Tulane University. He served as a pilot in the United States Marine Corps from 1953 to 1956, and obtained a Master of Laws Degree from New York University. He practiced law in New York City until he moved to Birmingham in 1957.

Mr. Grenier is married to the former Lynne Youmans of Nashville, Tennessee. They have one son.

An Editorial

Boobs—And The FBI

Probably one of the most highly respected public servants the United States has ever employed is J. Edgar Hoover, for 36 years Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The high regard in which Mr. Hoover is held, universally, is well deserved. Under Mr. Hoover the FBI has developed a reputation for complete, immovable, incorruptible dedication to purpose — which is, quite simply, to bring to bar violators of the Federal Law.

With its solid record of performance and the outstanding high quality of its people, the FBI is, year in and year out, through one "administration" after another, a solid rock in our government around which any citizen can always throw a line, and to which he can always point with considerable pride of ownership—regardless of his political persuasion.

We have always considered the FBI to be independent of politics. We can only guess to what extent

Council Off Spot —King

King Claims "Inside Knowledge" Of City Plans To Hire Negroes

City Councilman George Seibels says that integration leader Martin Luther King's statement concerning the withdrawal of Negro demands for the hiring of Negroes for the Police Department is a "contemptible lie."

King earlier had said he had inside knowledge that the city was planning to hire Negro police officers in the near future, and that in order to help "save face" for the City Council he had withdrawn his ultimatum demanding the hiring of 25 Negroes as police officers within two weeks.

Seibels said: "King's statement brands him all the more as a contemptible liar who will say anything to make his point. If there is any face saving to be done it is up to King and Shuttlesworth."

"I challenge King to produce any evidence to show that he has inside knowledge that the city plans to add several Negroes to the police force in the near future."

"Any discussions concerning any of our present problems will never be with King or Shuttlesworth, and as long as they continue to try to blackmail this city and responsible Negro citizens, then there will never be any real hope for improving race relations."

"To follow and endorse the contemptible tactics of King and Shuttlesworth is to aid and abet left-wing agitators of this country."

Drennen, Bethea Will Debate Merger Issue

City Councilman Allen Drennen and his committee are currently studying ways and means to merge outlying communities with the City of Birmingham.

Thursday night, Oct. 24, Councilman Drennen and Jefferson County Representatives Malcom Bethea are scheduled to debate the issue at the Chamber of Commerce.

What we look forward to learning from this debate is whether the gentlemen are discussing "merger" or "annexation." There's a big difference.

"Merger" suggests a mutual understanding, reached ahead of time, between the City of Birmingham and each of the outlying towns involved as to how such things as school systems, fire department, police forces, etc., can be incorporated with the least pain and strain for all concerned. Also to be disposed of are such items as business licenses, contracts, taxes, municipal obligations, conflicting ordinances and a whole Pandora's box full of other problems waiting to be opened in each City Hall.

Solutions should be found; agreements should be reached; commitments should be made by the parent city Birmingham, and the voters must be well informed before the issue properly can be put to a vote.

If the communities involved vote for "merger" first, and then sit down to solve the myriad problems involved in amalgamating two separate and distinct municipalities.

Schmarkey Protests CAC Story

Birmingham attorney John C. Schmarkey has accused The Birmingham News of "inaccurate reporting" in connection with a story concerning action taken by the Group Relations subcommittee of the Community Affairs Committee at its Friday, Oct. 11 meeting.

The Group Relations Committee adopted a resolution calling on Mayor Boutwell to make an immediate public statement in favor of the City's hiring Negro police officers.

Following the Oct. 11 meeting, Schmarkey tendered his resignation to Mayor Boutwell.

JFK --- The Man And The Myth

How much do we know about John F. Kennedy, the man in the White House? Less than about any other president in recent history, writes Victor Lasky in a controversial series called JFK: THE MAN AND THE MYTH. Lasky asks some of the questions that have puzzled Americans for several years — about Kennedy's health, the influence of Kennedy's father, the convictions, or lack of them, the President holds — and pieces together the answer from a huge file of facts. This series exclusively in The Examiner will undoubtedly be a subject of controversy in political campaigns to come.

Following is the second article in a series by Victor Lasky, excerpted from his forthcoming book,

JFK: THE MAN AND THE MYTH (The Macmillan Company). By Victor Lasky

(Copyright, 1963, by Victor Lasky) North American Newspaper Alliance

President John F. Kennedy launched his political career on the basis of a misrepresentation. The episode occurred in 1946 when Kennedy, then twenty-five years old, decided to run for the Congressional seat vacated by James Michael Curley, the grand old man of Massachusetts politics.

To enter a Massachusetts primary, a candidate is required to submit the names of 250 party supporters. On April 2, 1946, John F. Kennedy presented such a list to the Office of the Registrars of Voters and Election Commissioners of the Commonwealth. There was one thing wrong.

however, John Kennedy himself was not an enrolled Democrat. The law clearly provided that while a serviceman could register to vote by mail, he must appear in person to enroll as a member of a political party. Jack Kennedy had not done so.

The last filing day was April 30. To be eligible to file, a candidate would have had to be a certified party member for not less than thirty days before that date.

Kennedy's oversight was discovered on April 2. The following day—twenty-seven days before the filing day—he quietly slipped into City Hall where he registered as a Democrat. He did this despite the fact that the law permitted no exceptions.

A small, inconsequential technicality? Perhaps. Yet, as Ralph G. Martin and Ed Plaut put it so delicately in their friendly book, "Front Runner, Dark Horse," it was "an embarrassing moment that would have been fatal to anyone whose name wasn't Kennedy."

Takes Over From Brother

Joseph Kennedy had originally envisioned his eldest son Joe Jr., as the politician in the family. Tall, handsome, outgoing and robust, Young Joe—the photographs show—was his father to the life. They were also alike ideologically. At Harvard Law School he helped organize a keep-America-out-of-war group and made speeches decrying United States intervention in "foreign wars." In one speech he declared the United States would be better off dealing with a Nazi-occupied Europe in a barter system than engaging in total war on the side of Great Britain.

Young Joe launched his political career in 1940 as an anti-Roosevelt delegate at the Democratic National Convention, pledged to support James A. Farley for President. The episode provided another chip of ice in the cool expanse that eventually divided the Kennedy and Roosevelt families. Four years later, Joseph Kennedy Jr. died a hero's death in the European war. And it was fore-ordained that, as the next in line, John F. Kennedy would take his place and carry on for the family.

"I thought everybody knew about that," Father Joe once said to author Joe McCarthy. "Jack went into politics because Young Joe died. Young Joe was going to be the politician in the family. When he died, Jack took his place."

Who's Jack Kennedy?

At the outset of the 1946 campaign the voters wondered who this handsome, seemingly shy outsider was. He didn't live in Boston and was a newcomer to politics. True, his parents were born in the District and his grandfather had controlled its votes. But he had grown up elsewhere, and he knew little about the area he wanted to represent in Congress. Later he observed that the only person whom he really knew there at the time was his grandfather Honey Fitz, the former Boston mayor and veteran of many political wars. He was then eighty-three and living in retirement at the Hotel Bellevue, a political hangout adjacent to the State House on Beacon Hill.

But in politics, money atones for many deficiencies.

The problem of a legal residence was quickly solved. A suite was rented for Jack at the Bellevue Hotel, and in filing his papers as a candidate for office he used it as his official address. Actually until then, his legal residence was Palm Beach, the home of his father. Later he acquired as his official residence a three room apartment at 123 Bowdoin Street, across from the State House on top of Beacon Hill.

(Bobby and Teddy, along with their wives, have also used the Bowdoin Street apartment as their legal address. The truth is none of them ever used the apartment for any length of time. The apartment serves one purpose only: to give the Kennedy brothers a political residence. In March 1960 some Massachusetts Democrats moved to bar Bobby from going to Los Angeles as a convention delegate on the grounds he was not a Bay State resident. Bobby, it was then pointed out, lived on a palatial Virginia estate, and at one time considered making the Old Dominion his political base. The only time in recent years Jack used the Boston flat was for an Ed Murrow "Person to Person" TV appearance with his wife.)

Chums—And Pros

It was in the 1946 campaign that Jack Kennedy first employed the techniques that were to bring him electoral success after success. First, he had gotten off to an early start. Long before his rivals bestirred themselves, he was campaigning. Then he began building his own personal organization composed of college chums, wartime shipmates, and Ivy Leaguers. Some were Republicans, and most were uncommitted ideologically. But all pitched in to help out Good

Then there was Timothy (Ted) Reardon, one of Joe Jr.'s buddies, who was to be part of the Kennedy entourage all the way to the White House.

But Joseph P. Kennedy was taking no chances with the likes of these. He brought in a phalanx of seasoned ward heelers. The Ambassador had the final word on who was to be put on the payroll.

The Ambassador brought in Francis X. Morrissey, once secretary to Governor Maurice Tobin, as campaign manager. (By 1961, Morrissey—a municipal court judge, thanks to Jack Kennedy—was shepherding Ted Kennedy around the state, getting him to meet the right folks, just as he had done with Jack in 1946.)

To teach Jack politics, the Ambassador brought in his first cousin Joe Kane, a forty-year veteran of the Bay State's political wars. Kane provided young Jack with an insight into the mechanics of political infighting. "In politics," he drummed into his protégé's head, "you have no friends, only co-conspirators." It was Kane who suggested that Kennedy avoid announcing for office until almost the last minute. The idea was to keep the political opportunists from jumping into the primary—an old Boston custom—hoping for payoffs to remove themselves as candidates.

Finally, on April 22, 1946, eight days before the filing deadline, Jack Kennedy formally announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for United States Representative from the Eleventh Massachusetts District. "The temper of the times imposes an obligation upon every thinking citizen to work diligently in peace, as we served tirelessly in war," he declared.

Ran On His War Record

Kennedy ran on his heroic war record. According to the private polls financed by his father, this is what the people were interested in—the story of how he won the Navy and Marine Corps Medal in the South Pacific. And Kennedy, with appropriate modesty, would tell and retell the story before campaign audiences, usually referring to himself in the third person. ("The commanding officer of the PT 109, believing it to be a Japanese destroyer, turned the bow of his PT to make a torpedo attack . . .")

Then he would describe the death struggle that lay ahead between collectivism and capitalism, winding up with this stock exhortation: "We in this country must be willing to battle for the old ideas which have proved their value, with the same enthusiasm that people do for new ideas and creeds."

One critic noted it sounded more like Joseph Patrick Kennedy than like Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

As the campaign progressed, Kennedy's Ivy League advisers proposed changing the tenor of the speech. While there was nothing wrong with patriotism as a gimmick, they pointed out that the Eleventh District had some serious bread-and-butter problems. A new speech was evolved by a sort of brain-storming, one that discussed such issues as price and rent control, more and better housing, higher minimum wages, jobs, etc.

At first the rest of the candidates laughed Kennedy off. Then, as the campaign progressed, the taunts changed to outright indignation. Charges were voiced that Old Joe Kennedy was trying to buy the election for his "carpet-bagger son"—charges that were to ring in Jack's ears throughout his political career.

Once Mike Neville, Kennedy's rival in the primary, walked into the State House press room with a $10 bill hanging out of his breast pocket.

"That's a Kennedy campaign button," he said.

Comes The Clan

Meanwhile, flying in from everywhere were other Kennedys—thus setting a pattern that was to be repeated in future elections. (In later elections, however, they were to be supplemented by wives and husbands and were to be regarded by many Bostonians as foreigners. "As soon as the last vote is counted," one newsmen said, "the Kennedys and their wives and husbands are hurrying to the airport to catch the next plane out of town. They don't even wait until the tents are taken down.")

Kennedys swarmed into the wards, going from house to house, ringing doorbells, cradling babies, and telling thousands of voters what a wonderful brother Jack was. His sisters helped organize neighborhood house parties. Kennedy sometimes went to half a dozen of them in a single evening. The Kennedy organization supplied everything—coffee, cookies, china, silverware, flowers. At campaign headquarters a careful record was kept of everyone who attended the parties. Later, they were asked to talk to their neighbors about Jack.

How much was spent? Only Joe Kennedy could possibly have known. His first cousin Joe Kane said later it was "a staggering sum." But Kane contended most of it was unnecessary: "Jack could have gone to Congress like everyone else for ten cents."

Then why did his father spend so much?

Because, said Kane, he was taking no chances on any possible slip-up. "Everything his father got, he bought and paid for," he added. "And politics is like war. It takes three things to win. The first is money and the second is money and the third is money."

Primary day—June 18, 1946—finally rolled around. This was the day that counted. The victor in the primary would be the next Congressman.

And to no one's great surprise, when the votes were counted, Jack Kennedy's name led all the rest. He received 22,183 votes, almost double that obtained by his closest rival Mike Neville.

It was for the Clan Kennedy a sweet victory, indeed. For Old Honey Fitz, it was proof positive of the political virility of Grandson Jack. So stirred was Grandfather Fitzgerald that he climbed on to a table at campaign headquarters that night and danced a stiff-legged Irish jig and sang in a cracked voice "Sweet Adeline." It was the swan song of the old, colorful and rascally breed of Boston Irish politics. A new breed of politician was about to take over.

Truman All For Ike Seeking GOP Job, If He Wants

NEW YORK (N.Y. News)—If former President Eisenhower should decide he wants to run for vice president, he has the right to try "like anyone else," Harry S. Truman says.

Ike's White House predecessor offered that opinion when asked about reports that Eisenhower has been inquiring into the legality of such a candidacy.

As to whether Ike in the No. 2 spot would strengthen a GOP ticket, Truman said the only way he can find out is to try.

(Friends insist Ike's curiosity on the point is merely legal and academic.)

Rules Self Out

Truman smilingly ruled himself out as vice presidential timber for the Democrats.

"It's too late to start at 70," he said, "but if I were 58—"

Other Truman remarks included:

Regarding Mme. Ngo Dinh Nhu—"I don't know anything about her and I don't give a damn about her."

Regarding his stand against racial intermarriage—"I've received a stack of mail and all but a few letters favored my position, which is just common sense. Most of them came from the South."

The Valachi hearings—"I think they have some value."

The three-most notorious Missouri characters—Jesse James, bandit; Champ Clark, noted congressional figure; Harry S. Truman, one-time president.

HAND THAT WASHES

CANNES, France (WNS)—The latest beauty product for teen-age girls is a bar of soap made in the shape of the hand of Johnny Hallyday, France's rock 'n' roll singing star.

Winter Rejuvenation No Job For A Slouch

VENICE, Italy — (WNS) — Royal beauty expert Lucchino Bontempi has put the aging confessions he counsels on a winter rejuvenation routine of pinching, kneading, grimacing and yawning to take at least five years off their ages.

To stimulate blood circulation and get rid of facial poisons and impurities, he prescribes wetting the face with warm water, then pinching it all over with thumb and index finger.

Later, the skin should be kneaded with both hands as if it were dough being prepared for the baking oven. Then it should be patted, slapped and lightly punched.

Royal ladies are also advised to yawn 15 times "as large as possible," then close the mouth with the lips inside before lowering the chin to touch the neck and pivoting the head 20 times.

After that, they should pronounce the letters "O" and "I" 17 times, as openly as possible. They can finish up by pushing the chin forward, thrusting out the lower lip, and making "horrible grimaces and expressions."

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Victor Lasky, author of the sizzling "JFK: THE MAN AND THE MYTH," is a walking encyclopedia of Kennedyana. His first book on Kennedy, called "JOHN F. KENNEDY, WHAT'S BEHIND THE IMAGE?", was published just before the 1960 election and was an exhaustive comparison of Kennedy's voting record in the Senate with his platform as a Presidential candidate.

His current book is being published by Macmillan & Company and is expected to be the major publishing event of the year.

Lasky also co-authored (with Ralph de Toledano) the best-selling account of the Alger Hiss case, "SEEDS OF TREASON," published in 1950.

A graduate of the tough Chicago school of journalism, Lasky has worked on the CHICAGO SUN, covered World War II as a Stars & Stripes war correspondent, then joined the staff of the NEW YORK WORLD TELEGRAM & SUN.

He has also written hundreds of magazine articles on national and international affairs—from THE SATURDAY EVENING POST to the NEW LEADER to THE SATURDAY REVIEW.

Today Lasky writes a weekly column for NORTH AMERICAN NEWSPAPER ALLIANCE and THE EXAMINER called "Say It Straight!" He lives in New York with his wife, Pat, and his poodle, Charlie Brown.

Heartless Publisher Calls For Work Break

It has just been terrible. I've been about as popular around the office this week as a uniformed Storm Trooper would be in Palestine.

It all started when Joe (he's the publisher) suggested we go into executive session and have a conference. Well, if that was a con-

Said I: "I have been grinding out copy until my arm is sore." He said: "Perhaps the soreness is in the elbow, brought about from the incessant bending thereof."

Well now, I thought that was an uncalled for remark, but I've known a lot of publishers in my yet to know one on whose desk you could pound and tell him he had just made an uncalled for statement.

If all this wasn't bad enough, things the week before were even worse. You see the Bama's My Beat building has been moved into sparkling new offices and one of them is all paneled and carpeted. Naturally I figured that was where I was to do all my creating.

An 'interloper' WELL, HECK, the publisher moved from his downtown office into the Bama's My Beat building, and an earlier "get-to-work" I've never known.

He ensconced himself into that paneled, carpeted office just like he owned the joint and I've been relegated into an overgrown broom closet that serves as a throughfare into old Buck's office (he's the editor) and as a socializing point for the advertising department.

All of this has resulted in nothing short of consternation and has worried me also.

You see, middle age has been creeping up on me like a runaway avalanche and I've got—admittedly—somewhat "set in my ways."

Those Work Breaks

WITH A DESIRE to commute from my beloved Blount County hills where I commune with nature, and a habit of hiking about five miles with my 140-pound German Shepherd puppy each morning, and with the new offices about 30 minutes farther from Blount County, it is becoming increasingly difficult for me to sandwich in any work breaks in my daily routine.

That really didn't bother me too much until last payday. When the payroll clerk handed me my check, tears as big as volleyballs cascaded down her face. Joe had just signed the check.

State Forests Unusually Dry; Caution Urged

MONTGOMERY—Forest fires have risen sharply in dry Alabama woodlands during the past two weeks because of dryness, low humidity, higher wind velocity and more people using the wooded areas.

Woods-users are cautioned to be "especially careful" with matches, cigarettes and campfires.

Annual rainfall is 5 to 10 inches below normal for most areas of the State and recent "spotty showers" have not "appreciably" altered the situation.

State Forester J. M. Stauffer says the Fall fire toll has been heaviest in north Alabama. Fire losses for the two-week period were reported averaging 500 acres a day. Stauffer called on those who go into the woods to "use extreme care" to prevent further fire outbreaks.

now, Southern senators are a chief obstacle to further appeasement of Communism by the administration.

To the question: "In the light of current events and perspectives, do you think the influence of colonial powers on ex-colonial peoples was good or bad?" readers answers ran as follows: "We're better off under colonialism," "the influence was advantageous," "bad for the rest of the world but good for the subjects themselves." No reader thought the influence had been bad.

The necessity of banging out some columns outweighed my desire to get up to Horse Pens 40 and chew the fat with old Musgrove.

I sucked in my stomach and squeezed out of my broom closet and hopped around into Joe's office.

"Wonderful idea I have for some columns, Joe," said I. "How does the idea of doing another story on burying beet..."

I didn't even get to finish the word beetle before he thundered: "If one more word is put in this paper about the animal undertaking beetle, you're going to need a people undertaker to get back out of the office."

Have you ever tried to laugh at a time like that? I couldn't. I couldn't even twist a wry and sickly little grin across my face.

Here We Go Again

I SUCKED in my stomach and squeezed back into my broom closet of an office with perspiration rolling off my brow as big as volleyballs.

Suffice to say I wasn't in any mental shape to write anything the rest of the day. I just sat around and shuffled papers from one side of my desk to the other.

Now here I am with deadline staring at me making me about as nervous and wall-eyed as a Ku Kluxer at a Black Muslim convention.

I just don't know what to write. Hark! Maybe I can write about my old friend of long standing, Warren T. Musgrove of Horse Pens 40.

No, the last time I pulled that stunt I got docked in pay for advertising space.

Art Show Coming

I sure would admire to relate as how the Chandler Mountain Harvest Festival and Horse Pens 40 Clothes Line Art Show is going to be this Saturday and Sunday.

I hear about a 100 of the top artists in the state will be there with all their pretty pictures hanging on clothes lines, propped against rocks and tacked up on trees.

I know Good Old Ronald is going to be there barbecuing chickens all drenched in Wild Willie Sauce, a secret recipe handed down from the ancient Pharaohs in older Egypt.

But I don't guess I had better write about that either.

Boy, things are just terrible. Here I sit columnless and about as popular in the office as a uniformed Storm Trooper would be in Palestine.

Speckled Trout Rodeo Listed In Top Twenty

MONTGOMERY—The annual Speckled Trout Rodeo, scheduled for November 23-30 in Gulf Shores, has been selected by the National Association of Travel Organizations as one of the "top twenty" travel events of the month, according to Ed Ewing, state director of the Bureau of Publicity and Information.

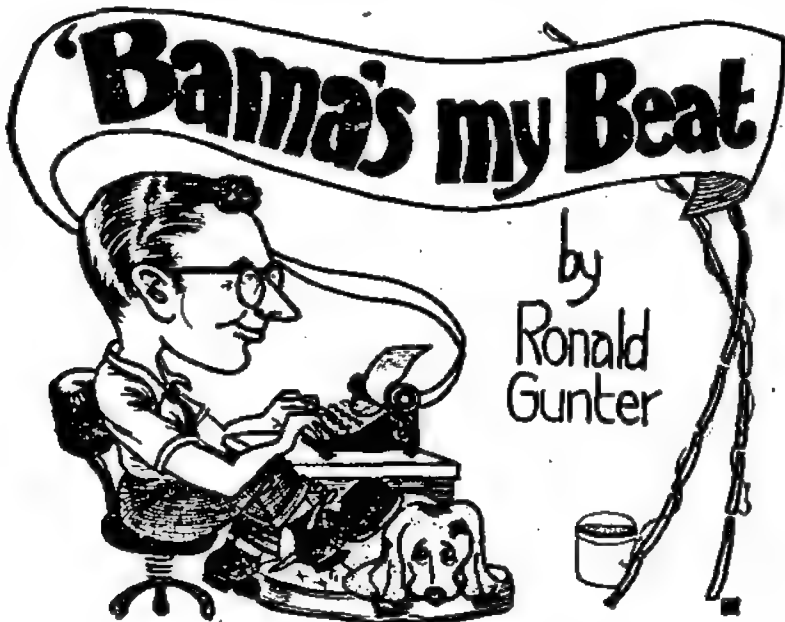

The "top twenty" events are those judged to be leading events of interest to tourists throughout the United States. The list is widely circulated throughout the country.

Organizations getting the "top twenty" list include:

Advertising agencies; air lines; auto clubs; auto rental services; bus lines; convention bureaus; government agencies; hotels; map makers; marine shipping lines; hotels; newspapers; oil companies; railroads; resorts; sightseeing lines; travel attractions; travel magazines; and travel shows.

"We are pleased that we were able to have this outstanding annual event listed on the top twenty. It is a big boost for the State of Alabama and the Gulf Shores area. This will focus nationwide attention on this area," said Ewing.

Governor George Wallace has emphasized increased travel promotion as a means of improving the economy of the state.

What's Your Question? On World Affairs

"Do you believe that Khrushchev and other Communist leaders really believe the absurd theories of Max and Lenin or that Communism will benefit mankind?" (John Donovan, Copiague, N.Y.)

Opinions differ greatly. My view is that most Communists start out by believing, then identify the good of mankind with their own power and finally have a vested interest in spreading Communism since it can last only if it preads to the entire world.

"Your article on Rostow and foreign aid was excellent. Most Americans never heard of Rostow and the A.D.A. Tell us more about both." (D. Gornston, Elmhurst, N.Y.)

Rostow is an economist from M.I.T. The author of a recent book "The Stages of Economic Growth," whose theories about Communism this administration seems to me to be following—sad to say. The A.D.A. is a group of dedicated "reformers" who believe they are more responsible for all the others. Mrs. Roosevelt was a typical A.D.A.-er.

"How can I get a copy of the Congressional Record of July 29?" Paul Danish, Bladell, N.Y.)

Send your request with 30 cents in postage stamps, to the superintendent of documents, Government Printing Office, Wash., D.C.

Several readers have sent me thoughtful letters arguing that the passage of the test ban treaty was right and proper, indeed, essential, to prevent nuclear war. I am delighted in their interest in world affairs even though I differ. But when Mrs. Merilee Karcher of Farmingdale, N.Y., opposes counteraction against the Communists of North Viet Nam because it "would be an invitation to war," I am obliged to remind her that communism is at war with us and that the sooner we recognize this fact, and act accordingly, the safer we'll be.

"Do you think the new love affair between the two K's will result in our helping the rotten Reds of Moscow to fight the putrid Red of Peking and end up with a new Cuba and Kennedy in power?" ("Wondering," Norwalk, Conn.)

We are already helping Red Russia to keep Red China from obtaining nuclear weapons. I doubt if this administration would go farther to help. Obviously, the present peace campaign is part of the Kennedy drive for reelection. Remember, Woodrow Wilson was re-elected in 1916 to the slogan, "He kept us out of war," and then entered the war a couple of months later.

"In view of the way Southerners are behaving, wouldn't we have been better off if we had let the South secede?" (Albert French, New York).

I once heard my father, whose own father had fought for four years in the Union Army, express the view that secession might have been wise. Personally, despite my views against slavery and discrimination, I cannot but remember the marvelous services which generations of Southerners have rendered to our country. Even

World In A Jug—The Stopper In His Hand

The Negro race has another more disturbing characteristic — this one in the mental category. And it gives us excellent reason to question the wisdom of turning over to the Negro the responsibility of choosing the leaders of this government.

We refer to the almost childlike tendency among Negroes to blindly accept the supposition that ordinary mortals can suddenly become gods by merely announcing this great feat to other Negroes. These self-styled gods are, of course, always black people!

Take the case of George Baker for instance. George was born in the late 1880's on a rice plantation located on Hutchinson Island in the Savannah River. He was one of several children born to a Negro couple who worked as laborers on the plantation.

Early in life, George discovered that he could make more money passing the collection plate in Negro churches than he could ever hope to make in the rice fields. Like most Negro reverends, he took no special training to prepare him for his chosen profession.

George soon joined forces with another Negro named Sam Morris. Sam had stopped calling himself Sam and had taken on the glorified name of "Father Jehovah." He let George call himself "The Messenger." Other Negroes calmly accepted this elite pair at their word and gave them such money as they had. But Georgia Negroes in the rural areas had very little cash. George was forced to perform such mortal tasks as mowing lawns, clipping hedges and hauling garbage in order to keep up his godlike appearance on Sundays.

Then they met another black prophet who called himself "St. John The Vine." The police knew him better as just plain old John Hickerson. The trio headed for Baltimore and went into the god business in a big way. George made money but he still hadn't been promoted to a godlike title.

When the police raids became more and more frequent, George headed back to Valdosta, Georgia where he announced that he had been re-born and was henceforth to be known as "Father Divine." Then he went about the business of setting up his first "heaven." He was particularly fond of angels and took several of them into his brand new heaven with himself as their "God." He gave his angels beautiful titles like "Virgin Mary," "Sanctified Cloth," "Shining Dimples," and "Fiery Chariot." There was no longer any doubt in most Negro minds that George Baker, alias Father Divine, was really and truly a re-born "God." George unblushingly admitted his divinity and said he was, furthermore, the reincarnation of Christ, come back to earth in a black skin to lead his people to heaven. He was even willing to take along a few white people if they could pay the fare.

He took his angels and went north again and set up another heaven in a 32-room French-Gothic mansion on the banks of the Schuylkill River near Conshohocken, Pa. He called it "The Mount of the House of The Lord." He took a white wife and immediately had her re-born and named "Mother Divine." He still maintained his full complement of angels, however.

By 1955, Father Divine had the full worship as well as full financial support of over 2,500,000 Negroes. They accepted him without question as God. At their frequent meetings, the former George Baker was greeted with his favorite "hymn."

"Father Divine is my Father; Father Divine is walking in the land."

Father Divine got the world in a jug; he got the stopper in his hand."

But Father Divine was by no means the only black man to be freely accepted as "God" by other Negroes.

Detroit had its Prophet Jones. But after this prophet set up his "heaven," he accepted only young boys as his angels. The Detroit police took a dim view of such shenanigans. This, however, in no way prevented countless Negroes from calling him "God" and turning over all their worldly goods to him. Prophet Jones traveled around from heaven to heaven in probably the only diamond-studded Cadillac in Detroit. Negroes are great believers in having their gods live in the finest splendor this earth can provide.

In a previous column (The Examiner, June 13, 1963) we went into the matter of another Georgia Negro named Elijah Poole who also came to Detroit and announced that he had suddenly become a god. He named himself "Elijah Muhammad" and set up a cult called The Black Muslims. He conferred divinity on several other Negroes, mostly ex-convicts, and today receives the blind adoration and worship of tens of thousands of American Negroes. He also receives all the cash his disciples can squeeze out of his worshippers.

Who will be the next Negro to become "God?"

It could very well be Martin Luther King!

During the recent invasion of Washington, a Negro woman was seen to leap to her feet at the sight of King and scream in ecstasy, "You know who you is! You is God, that's who you is!"

King is in the perfect position to suddenly claim divinity for himself. And 20 million Negroes will accept this immediately. With his unswerving support from the Federal Government, King could very well make all the other "Gods" before him look like a bunch of small-time operators.

White Americans may still have a slight chance, though. King may just possibly be a bit too smart to attempt such a bald deception. Plus the fact he already has a bigger jug and a tighter stopper than Father Divine ever dreamed of.

There is also the chance that, if King does decide to take on a godlike mantle, he and all these other black "Gods" may fall to fighting among themselves for control of the collection plates and the coverts of "angels."

That would indeed cause a rage in heaven.

Joan Blondell Speaks Up For Old-Time Glamor

One warm afternoon on M.G.M.'s far-out lot No. 4, the "Company of Cowards" set was transformed into the glamorous, fairy-tale legend that was formerly Hollywood.

The reason was Joan Blondell. Against a backdrop of grazing horses, milling dusty Yankee soldiers, and a white riverboat with its paddlewheel churning the man-made "river," Miss Blondell reigned—a true movie queen.

Her serviceable trailer dressing room took on the aura of pink chiffon-draped luxury, of the days when stars' dressing rooms were protected from outside glances with shimmering screens and a red carpet stretched from the threshold to the sound (or silent) stage.

Had she been dressed in a pink feather boa-trimmed peignoir instead of slacks and long-tailed shirt, Miss Blondell couldn't have been more representative of true glamor. Her honey-golden hair was piled high into an extravagance of busy curls—abetted with a matching hairpiece "to give it gush and height." Those large, luminous green eyes and the original beauty mark on the left cheek lived up to the legend, too.

Attitude To Hollywood

Miss Blondell has a good-humored, though critical, attitude about the more "realistic" Hollywood. "It's just wrongly set up, now," she told me. "But it will change, because anything that is unnatural or unhealthy must change. This profession needs old-time glamor—and lots of it!"

"There has to be new grass growing in this world. There is plenty of beauty around, loaded with talent. But it needs to be watered to grow and blossom. Men have forgotten that women need a helping hand! Men have their hands in holsters, now. This is the 'shoot-em up' phase. Now they push your covered wagon over, or jump over you with a horse!"

"It's a shame that men aren't called upon to do more for a woman—to coddle her, treasure her! Even the most determined career girl longs for that."

Need Femininity

"And men wonder why real women are becoming extinct."

"The American girl has forgotten how to be mysterious. She should always look as if she has a secret—even if her secret is that she doesn't have one! And she should never give it away. Even if she marries the guy, there should be a little area that is secret and apart from him. It will keep him interested, keep him on his toes! There isn't a guy in the world who isn't rattled by mystery. That is the special, built-in secret of Garbol."

"Be vain, be mysterious, be catered to! It's as it should be!"

She returned to the subject of Hollywood glamor.

"You can't tell me that women all over the world aren't gratified at seeing glamor on the screen. They think 'maybe if I brushed my hair a little more, maybe if I lost a few pounds, I'd look like that!' This was the great secret that Hollywood had. Now you see all this rough and tough stuff on the screen, and pictures of a star over a stove, or with her head in an icebox."

The son was immediately conquered by Arlette Catherine. They have just been married.

Red Tide Sweeping Over Latin America

By VICTOR LASKY

NEW YORK (NANA)—While wheat-short Nikita Khrushchev whispers sweet nothings in our ears, his agents have stepped up their campaign for a sovietized Latin America. Communist-inspired unrest is sweeping the hemisphere. A current case in point is Venezuela.

This is the considered judgment of a leading authority on Latin American affairs, Daniel James, who says: "Within two to five years, there will be Vietnams and Laoses all over the Western hemisphere. Unless Washington immediately faces up to the problem of stemming the Communist tide, I predict that American combat troops will be fighting in the jungles of Central and South America."

These are harsh predictions, but they come from a man who, in his books and various writings, has demonstrated great perception in predicting the tide of Latin American events. Currently, Dan James is executive director of the Citizens Committee For a Free Cuba. As such he is in an excellent position to know just what is going on in Castro's Cuba.

According to James, there are 10 camps in Cuba devoted to training Communist guerrillas. "Students" from all over the hemisphere are taught the arts of sabotaging and taking over legitimate governments. Their bible is Che Guevara's famed manual on guerrilla warfare. The Argentine-born Guevara is, of course, one of Fidel Castro's leading henchmen.

Cuban Fiasco

The problem, says Dan James, goes back to the fiasco of the Bay of Pigs. Had the U.S.-backed exile invasion of Castroland been successful, a major source of the Communist infection in Latin America would have been smashed. "But that's water under the bridge," says James. "The question now is: Where do we go from here?"

Particularly troubling to James is the situation in oil-rich Venezuela. A presidential election campaign, with seven candidates vying against each other, is currently in process. At the same time, the Communists have launched a civil war. And there is talk of a possible military takeover similar to those in Honduras and the Dominican Republic recently.

James is not too happy about the latter possibility. He notes that the Venezuelan military establishment is not particularly anti-Communist. In fact, it is heavily infiltrated by Castro sympathizers. Few Americans now recall, for example, that Admiral Wolfgang Larrazabal, who headed the junta which took over after the fall of Dictator Perez Jimenez, ran against President Romulo Betancourt in 1958 with Communist Party support.

Though James is no great admirer of President Betancourt, he believes it would be tragic for Latin American democracy if, under left and right wing assaults, he is not permitted to finish his term of office. If he does finish, Betancourt will be the first freely elected president in Venezuelan history to do so.

Pink President

Neither was Dan James an admirer of Juan Bosch, the deposed head of the Dominican Republic. For many months, James had been warning that Bosch's dilly-dallying with the Communists would lead to a military takeover. James is not happy with the military takeover either.

"But," he says, "let us hope for the best."

James has now reached the conclusion that to prevent the downfall of Latin American regimes it might become necessary for President Kennedy to send in U.S. forces.

"If we had sent the Marines into Cuba following the Bay of Pigs, such as Richard Nixon suggested to the President at the time, we would not be facing the terrible problems ahead of us," says James. "I am aware of Latin American hostility to such intervention. But I am also aware that most Latin Americans are much more frightened by the lack of firm American response to Castro's depredations."

James makes it clear that, as far as American politics are concerned, he is strictly non-partisan. He notes that his Citizens Committee for a Free Cuba is composed of people of all parties. The committee, located at 1426 G St., N.W., Washington 5, D.C., is now engaged in a fund-raising drive. A letter from retired Admiral Arleigh Burke, seeking contributions, notes the widening threat of Latin American Communism.

"The small island of Cuba is no longer the issue," says Admiral Burke. "The security of the United States itself is at stake."

Educators' New Report Calls For Revision Of Schools

The author, a Pulitzer Prize Reporter, is education editor of the North American Newspaper Alliance.

By DR. BENJAMIN FINE

NEW YORK (NANA)—A drastic revision of the public school system which would eliminate the traditional grades and permit children to advance at their own pace, has been proposed by a committee of prominent educators.

The lock step in education that now chains many students to a particular grade would be broken. Schools were urged to introduce nongrading and team teaching, and to experiment with modern educational methods. These recommendations are contained in a 146-page, three-year report, "Schools For The 'Sixties'" (McGraw-Hill). The report was prepared by the project on instruction committee of the National Education Association.

Teachers were called upon to introduce controversial subjects in the classroom, even though it sometimes takes courage to discuss unpopular issues.

A revision of the grading system would mean tremendous changes in our public schools. At present, children move from grade to grade, going from the first to the 12th, usually on the basis of age. In a nongrading program, the grade labels are removed from some or all classes. This provides opportunity for continuous progress for each learner.

It is known that children entering kindergarten or first grade differ from one another markedly in their readiness to profit from the subjects offered.

In a nongrading setup, the pupils could move according to their own abilities. The slow learners may continue to do first-grade work for two years, while the faster ones might complete three years in one. This pattern is not possible in the majority of schools today. The graded lock-step denies individuality, stifles initiative and unjustly punishes the slow but steady.

Repeating Doesn't Help
Many schools simply ask a child to repeat a grade, if the child is unable to keep up with her classmates. However, research shows that nonpromotion does not result in improved educational accomplishment. There is a greater tendency for nonpromoted children to do less well the next year than they did on comparable tests a year before. Also, children who have been "left back" frequently become disciplinary cases and drop out of school as soon as they come of legal age.

By doing away with the existing grade structure, the NEA report declares, teachers will be able to give children more individual attention. If he is good in reading, but not in arithmetic, he may be doing the equivalent of grade-four reading and grade two arithmetic. Since the labels have been removed, no stigma is attached to the slow learner who may take longer to master his particular subject than others within his group.

It will take more than an NEA study, however, to change existing grade patterns. This system is too entrenched to change easily. But it is important that educators recognize that new patterns are essential if all children are to re-

Sen. Goldwater's Brother Is—A Registered Democrat!

By KENNETH ARLINE

PHOENIX, Ariz., (NANA) — Sen. Barry Goldwater's brother is a registered Democrat.

The brother, Robert Williams Goldwater Sr., who runs the family's business interests, admits though that he has given much thought to changing his registration to Republican before the next general election.

At that time, November, 1964, Sen. Goldwater most probably will be either a candidate for re-election to the Senate or the Republican nominee for President of the United States.

Called "Bob" more often than Robert, the Phoenix businessman — born on July 14, 1910 — is 18 months younger than the senator. The brothers have always been very close, as playmates during boyhood and as men in the business world.

Studied At Stanford While the senator had to quit college and assume management of the family's business upon the death of their father, Bob Goldwater was able to complete his college education. He earned his degree at Stanford University after transferring from the University of Illinois. His fraternity is Sigma Chi.

When you ask Bob about his now famous brother, he admits the senator's "rise has been rather phenomenal" and somewhat of a surprise. Since his brother became prominently mentioned as a Presidential candidate, Goldwater said, "I can't give my name to an airline representative or be introduced to someone without being asked, 'Are you related to the senator?'"

Helpful Hints "That starts a conversation rolling and often these informal gatherings are very helpful. I get ideas and suggestions that I can pass on to the senator. I very seldom meet anyone who is not anything but nice." Goldwater said there have been a few instances when he has disagreed with his brother on certain issues, "but events always have proved him to be right."

Bob Goldwater has stayed clear of politics except to serve as treasurer of the nonpartisan Charter Government organization which conducts campaigns in Phoenix municipal elections. It was as a member of the organization's first ticket in 1948 that Barry Goldwater started on his political career. He was elected to the Phoenix city council.

The businessman said his chief community interest is the Boys Clubs. He is also regional chairman for CARE.

When he isn't behind his desk as president of the Goldwaters Department Stores division of Associated Dry Goods Corp., or attending a meeting of the board of directors of one of several business firms, Goldwater probably will be found on a golf course.

He also likes to hunt, fish and play bridge.

Goldwater and his wife, Sally, daughter of the wealthy Donald D. Harringtons, of Texas, have four children.

The Battle And The Breeze

Stand Against Santa Claus Isn't Bad Idea—Just Late

By CELESTINE SIBLEY Women's News Service

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell came out against Santa Claus the other day and after the first sense of shock at his audacity passed, I suddenly found myself wishing somebody more likely to be followed by the masses of American people had done it years ago.

Of all the facets of our Christmas celebration, the Santa Claus one seems to me to be one we could best do without. The jolly old elf, the generous old saint who goes around rewarding good children on the night of the Christ Child's birth, was a delightful character to read and sing about.

If he were real in history or merely a folk legend like Paul Bunyan or John Henry, he deserves our affectionate interest and attention.

But has his contribution to our Christmas celebration been all good? Of course, it hasn't.

Santa Claus, we tell our children, will come see you if you're good, which is, of course, a fond fib. He will come to see all the children whose parents can scrounge up the money, go into debt, put stuff on the layaway, beg, borrow or steal something for Santa to "bring."

Good or bad, these children will be rewarded by Santa Claus.

What Of Others But there have been and probably always will be children in the world who are equally deserving, equally yearning, who are bypassed completely by the Good St. Nick. They don't know why.

Everywhere they turn — at school, in the stores, even in Sunday school, heaven help us — they hear that if you're good and mind your parents, the old man in the whiskers and red suit will come whipping in from the North Pole and bring you goodies.

When he doesn't, maybe they aren't permanently scared. Maybe they just learn a little (Continued On Page 13)

The Coffee Brewing Institute sends along a recipe for coffee bran kuchen which is as flavorsome a breakfast treat as one could ask for. Brown sugar, coffee, and cinnamon flavor it, and pecans are scattered on top. This recipe makes two, so you'll have one to freeze.

COFFEE BRAN KUCHEN

- (Two 9-Inch coffee cakes)
- 2½ cups sifted flour
- 3 teaspoons baking powder
- Few grains salt
- 2 cups firmly packed brown sugar
- 1 cup bran cereal
- ½ cup butter or margarine
- ½ cup strong coffee
- ½ cup evaporated milk
- ½ teaspoon baking soda

- 2 eggs, beaten
- 1 teaspoon cinnamon
- Whole pecan meats
- Mix flour, baking powder, salt, sugar and bran. Cut in shortening and butter with two knives or a pastry blender. Reserve 1 cup of this mixture for topping. Combine coffee, evaporated milk, and soda. Add remaining flour mixture; mix well. Add beaten eggs. Spoon into two greased and floured 9-inch layer cake pans, filling half full. Add cinnamon to topping mixture; sprinkle on top of batter. Scatter pecans on top. Bake at 375 degrees for 25-30 minutes.

Mrs. Evelyn Haak of Ingleside sends along a suggestion: "I was reading your wonderful recipes and thought I'd ask if you ever put a cut-up apple into a shrimp salad. It gives the salad such a nice flavor. I hope you'll try it."

Thank you, Mrs. Haak; I shall try it.

And Mrs. C. W. Beilfuss of Chicago has a helpful hint, too: "Keep some grated lemon peel and sugar in a jar in the refrigerator. It comes in handy when you are baking coffee cake."

It might be nice for a muffin topping, too.

Differing Class Views Often Dominate Marriage

By DR. JOYCE BROTHERS

(Copyright, 1963, by Dr. Joyce Brothers)

NEW YORK (NANA) Andre Pormbeanu may or may not be a fortune hunter, and his estranged wife, Gamble Benedict, may or may not be a spoiled and silly young woman. I've never met either of them, and frankly, I don't know. But even assuming the best will and sincerest intentions on the part of both parties, the Pormbeanu-Benedict marriage was earmarked for early failure.

The family opposition which surrounded this union could have been overcome. So could the considerable age-difference, and the fact that groom was a divorced man. Marriages involving any or all of these drawbacks do sometimes succeed.

But—Cinderella notwithstanding—the nuptial knot which attempts to bind partners from radically different social classes rarely holds fast. The simple reason, too often slighted by democracy-loving Americans is this, upper-, middle-, and lower-class persons usually make markedly different assumptions about the nature of marriage and family life, and these unconscious differences are so profound.

The typical working-class woman, for example, has been raised to the belief that an ideal husband is a strong masculine being with no "feminine" interests.

If her spouse were to develop a passion for modern painting, or to take up cello playing as a hobby, she would feel perplexed and even a little disgusted. The upper-class wife, on the other hand, views artistic accomplishment as a natural and desirable male standard.

Money, Pleasure, Or Duty

Or, take the subject of employment. Among the so-called "lower" classes, work is a pure and simple meal ticket. A woman belonging to this socio-economic class would be dismayed if her husband announced that he was throwing over his job for one that "interested him more," at lower pay. But the upper-middle (professional) class views work as a major source of emotional fulfillment.

The established upper classes take still a third view of work. They see it as an obligation to the community. A solidly upper-class citizen takes responsibility as it falls his way, placing public duty before either financial gain or vocational self-expression.

And now let's take a running look at some other rarely mentioned, but marriage-making-or-breaking differences in social-class attitudes.

Infidelity: Lower- and upper-class women feel that even the best of men may lapse occasionally, and that a wise wife knows when to look the other way.

Middle-class wives are much more moralistic.

Money: "conspicuous consumption" was once deemed a middle-class failing, but these days the lower classes are equally devoted to its pursuit. The middle-class emphasis has switched to "tasteful" consumption. A securely upper-class woman will dismiss over-concern with furniture as a symptom of vulgarity.

Permissive Parents

Child-rearing: As with infidelity, we find both ends splitting against the middle. At the extremes of the social scale, "spare the rod and spoil the child" is still a respected maxim. The middle-classes have always been more permissive.

Leisure-time pursuits: The lower classes like to relax and "put their feet up." Lower-middle men and women enjoy keeping on the go, physically. The upper-middle class seeks personalized self-expression.

Friends and Relatives: The lower-middle class socializes with neighbors and business associates, while the upper-middle selects an assortment of far-flung intimates who share certain key tastes and inclinations.

Upper-class men and women are socially loyal to relatives (even black sheep), childhood companions, and a handful of carefully selected friends.

In light of this knowledge, we can easily predict the pitfalls and problems most likely to arise when an inter-class marriage takes place, when, for instance, a blue-blooded prince charming weds his lower-middle-class secretary.

Conflict Of Attitudes

She will be astonished to find him watching pennies quite closely, and conclude that he is cheap. He will accuse her of extravagance, or even gold-digging.

He will view her casual friendliness with neighbors as a violation of taste and privacy. She will be bored and insulted by some of the duty relatives her husband expects her to entertain frequently.

He will regard his casual flirtations with other women as insignificant and natural. She will feel betrayed.

She will wish to be close to and indulgent with the children. He will insist that they are better prepared for life if placed in the aus-spouse's hands of governesses and tutors.

Many psychologists and sociologists are now beginning to feel that the odds for happiness are actually greater when two neurotics of similar social background enter a marriage, than when two more stable persons from dissimilar classes join. The moral is that the holes in your head should fit the bumps in your

Outspoken Veronica Lake Retains Beguiling Voice

By WARD MOREHOUSE

NEW YORK (NANA) — Veronica Lake left Hollywood in 1951 and hasn't been back, except briefly to pick up a divorce. She got out, she says, because "I wanted to be a human being instead of the walking dead. They said I'd be back in six months. They were wrong."

Veronica was a one-of-a-kind picture star of the 1940s. Small, slender, definitely nonvoluptuous, she did not fit the Hollywood mold. Yet something—her insouciant air, perhaps, or her seductive job. If I choose to wear slacks, and I do, that's nobody's business. I wanted to be left alone in my own life."

Two months ago Veronica made her New York stage debut in the Off-Broadway revival of "Best Foot Forward," playing a movie star. She has been offered two Broadway roles and is now reading the scripts. She can be choosy. "John Van Druten offered me 'I Am a Camera,' but I turned it down." It became a hit for Julie Harris.

Veronica can be disarmingly plainspoken. She is scornful of most gossip columnists and the other day told one of them where he could go in an outburst that must have shattered his ego. She doesn't relish the actorish atmosphere of Sardi's — "I don't need it." As she says, she does not like sham.

Famous Blonde Forelock
As a star she weighed 94 pounds; today her weight is 103. Her blonde hair ("It's natural") still has a way of falling across the eye and her voice retains its beguiling quality. Her blue-eyed gaze is direct and challenging. She was born Constance Kean in Brooklyn, and grew up in Saranac Lake, N.Y., in Miami and Montreal. She went into motion pictures at the age of 17, soon acquiring a new name.

"Arthur Hornblow Jr. gave me the name. He said Veronica expressed my features and Lake the coolness in my eyes. I was accused of breaking up Hollywood's model marriage (Hornblow and Myrna Loy) but it simply wasn't true."

A still photograph made at Randolph Field for "I Wanted Wings," showing her caught in the prop wash of a plane, was widely published. "People began asking who I was and suddenly the studio had a star on its hands. I think the public named me the Peekaboo Girl. It was an accident, the way my hair fell across my eye. It wasn't planned."

She has three children, all born in California. The divorce she picked up out there set her free from Andre De Toth, the Hungarian-born director. "Having been married to him for seven and a half years, I know what they mean when they say if you have a Hungarian for a friend, you don't need an enemy."

Boofo Sicilian Amour, Gains Their Gratitude

CALABELLOTTA, Italy (NANA)—Pietro Germi, the Italian director who won an Academy Award for poking ironic fun at Sicilian attitudes on marriage, divorce, and education, has been presented in a new production, "Seduced and Abandoned," a wry film on gun marriage.

Shepherds and peasants came to the ceremony from around and by donkey, cart and foot on dusty roads meandering over scorched hills to the main piazza of Calabellotta.

Presented Keys

"This is a gesture of our affection," the mayor said in giving Germi the keys to the monastery. "We wish to express the appreciation we Sicilians have for your films, even if apparently they poke fun at certain aspects of our customs. Now do what you will with this renowned edifice: You may transform it into a rest home or a gay hotel."

Local legend says the monastery was once the home of a dragon who ate a baby for breakfast. A saint, San Pellegrino, slew it in the monastery's "grotto del drago."

The Issue Is Freedom

"This is no stopgap election in 1964. This is not one just for record books. This one is for the history books. We stand now at the latter end of the second century of the American experience, the American Revolution.

"But this freedom, this Amercia, is a fragile moment in history's long span. Freedom always has been. It has not been the rule of mankind. It has been the exception. Today it remains the exception. And today, it remains the issue.

"Controls, coercion, compromise with tyranny are the marks of the New Frontier; big words and petty deeds are its adjectives and verbs; promises are its substitutes for performance, and its vision of issue is no wider than its view of electoral expediency.

"But the real issue remains. Freedom. And which party will more effectively preserve and enlarge it?

"Can there be any doubt?

"Those to whom we will oppose in 1964 have defaulted their leadership to turn the tides against tyranny abroad. And they have rejected limited government at home.

"America must have a choice, and freedom must have a chance.

"Republican principles, Republican candidacies offer the choice, give the chance and reaffirm the right of this God-blessed nation to reclaim the powers they are losing, to rededicate the will they are wasting, and to win the peace for which they are praying. — Sen. Barry Goldwater.

the Justice Department under Robert Kennedy may have "infiltrated" the FBI. Our guess would be very little, if at all. Our guess would also be that if any agent in Birmingham were caught politicking for either Kennedy or Governor Wallace, he might very quickly find himself stationed in Outer Mongolia.

In Birmingham today, the "National States Rights Party" is distributing literature villifying J. Edgar Hoover. They write with the same chalk they use to scrawl their anonymous obscenities on outhouse walls. We would not dignify them by even recognizing their existence were it not for the fact that in some eyes we might appear to have similar aims.

THE EXAMINER is completely opposed to the activities and goals of leaders of Negro civil rights movements. They are inspired by completely selfish and hypocritical motives. We intend to fight these people right to the last ditch — and all white people who support them, in or out of government. We intend to use facts, not dirty names, as weapons. Success in our efforts would be a victory for the Negro — not a victory for us.

Frankly, we don't think boobs like "Dr." Fields contribute anything but a loud racket. Because they're ugly, Fields and his shirt-tailed ignoramouses apparently think they're tough. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

We Like The Little Elf

Celestine Sibley, who writes for our Women's News Service, this week comes out against Santa Claus.

Says Miss Sibley, "of all the facets of our Christmas celebration, the Santa Claus one seems to me the one we could best do without."

We get her point, of course. It is to protect tender souls from the traumatic effects of NOT being visited by Santa — of failing to receive the just and promised rewards for "being good."

Somehow, though, there is a note here which doesn't ring quite true. Miss Sibley's arguments seem solid enough — but they are blunt-pointed and painful to accept. "Santa," she says, "will come to see all the children whose parents can scrounge up the money, go into debt, put stuff on layaway, beg, borrow or steal something for Santa "to bring."

"But there have been and probably always will be children in the world equally deserving, equally yearning who are by-passed by the good St. Nick. They don't know why."

Miss Sibley is not really talking about Christmas and Santa Claus. What she apparently means to say is that childhood itself is not all unrestricted happiness and childish uphoria. Looking back, it is also a place often inhabited by dark and nameless fears, and shattered little dreams, and the unthinking cruelty of other children. It is a time of utter defencelessness and complete dependence.

What Miss Sibley is talking about, it seems, is simply a part of life itself, which for everyone, rich and poor alike, includes the bitter with the sweet.

The wish fulfilled is not ALL there is to ask from life, however. The dream itself has in it the substance of its own rich reward.

Christmas, and the whole spirit of Christmas, are dreams of a sort. And to us they are worth holding onto — even if we do have to beg, and borrow and scrounge a little something for Santa "to bring."

So, one way or another, Miss Sibley, we'll be listening again this Christmas Eve for the clatter of tiny hooves on our rooftops. And if for some reason Santa doesn't make it to our house this year — well, then, there's always next year.

If that jolly old elf should somehow, in spite of everything, find his way down YOUR chimney this Christmas, Miss Sibley — please, don't turn the old boy away.

Death Rides High, Hard On Eiger

JUNGFRAUJOCH, Switzerland — Above the pretty village of Wilderswil with its flower-decked chalets, the Black Luchine bolts and leaps down the narrow valley between the Mannlichen and the Faulhorn. High on the stream, looking east toward the massive Wetterhorn and southwest to the dazzling white crown of the Jungfrau, lies Grindelwald, the sparkling ski resort so often in the Winter newsreels.

Above Grindelwald there is a broad meadow, on its lower reaches forming a steep but smooth slope that climbs 3,400 feet to the cog railway station at Kleine Scheidegg. In the snow months this is rated as the finest ski run in Europe.

But as the slope nears the mountain it steepens. It is studded by huge boulders and scored by deep ravines. Above that there is the area of fallen rock, hundreds of feet of crushed rubble hurled down from the crags and ledges by frost and thaw, wind and avalanche. And above all that begins the North Face of the Eiger—6,000 feet of nearly sheer rock wall.

SOMEWHERE up there are two little mounds of snow, new to the mountain. They mark the bodies of two Spanish climbers, trapped in June. Somewhere, also, for the past six years, have lain the remains of Gunther Norddurft and Franz Mayer. All the rest of the climbers of the Eiger are accounted for.

It has been 28 years since Max Sedlmayer and Karl Mehringer decided to smash the universally-held conviction that the Eiger's north face was unclimbable. In that time 114 men have hurled themselves against that wall. Seventy-nine have either made it to the top or been successfully rescued. Twenty-five are dead.

THE PIONEERS, Sedlmayer and Mehringer, led the parade of death. Crowds of sightseers queued up before the telescopes in the valley as the young Munich men rounded the First Pillar, made their way up the difficult Crack, crawled under the overhanging Rote Fluh and bivouacked for the night near the Swallow's Nest. But the next day in a bombardment of falling rock they only inched 300 feet up the Second Ice Field. On the third day they seemed hesitant.

You can study a mountain through a valley telescope or pore with a magnifying glass over an aerial photograph. But on the face it is never the same. What seems a mere shadow from a distance may be an impossible out-thrust. What looks like an inviting ledge from a swift-moving plane may prove only a stratum of rotten rock. Pioneers are not armed with answers. They come only with questions.

On the fourth and fifth days heavy clouds shrouded the fate of the climbers. The mountain was racked by blizzards, sleet and lightning. But on the sixth day the mists parted for a moment and there they were, struggling just above the Third Ice Field. That night the greatest storm of all scoured the face of the Eiger. A year later two frozen bodies were lowered from what is still known as the Death Bivouac.

IN 1938 the great Bavarian guide, Anderl Hintersoisser, found the key to the lower part of the climb in what is now known as (Continued On Page 12)

Capital Stuff

WASHINGTON (N.Y. News)—The phoniest debate of the year is going on here over whether the much-touted Alliance For Progress has been shattered by the rise of military dictatorships among our "good neighbors" in Central and South Africa.

Two senators in particular, Wayne Morse (D., Ore.), and Ernest Gruening (D., Alaska), have contributed most to the hypocritical discussion with dire warnings that if this dictatorship trend continues the grand hemisphere alliance for progress is dead as a dodo.

Almost equally culpable, however, is the State Department, especially assistant secretary Edwin M. Martin, for deciding that these new dictatorships are more civilized than in the past and even are attuned to the ideals of constitutional government.

This pap from both sides, it is agreed by hemisphere experts, does nothing more than fuzz up the fact that military takeovers south of the border are fairly normal events which should neither be viewed with alarm nor distorted in significance by our State Department. The fact is that no one ever believed in 1961 when President Kennedy developed the Alliance for Progress that the end of dictators was near. Of course, the president expressed hope at the time that the alliance would strengthen the cause of freedom throughout all Latin America. But that was a long-range hope at a prayer.

The intent of the alliance has been to raise through cooperative effort the economic levels of our neighbors to the south and so to prove democratic processes that the lower half of this hemisphere could be safe from communism.

Costs $1.5 Billion

For this worthy cause this government has kicked in $1.5 billion in two years and wants $600 million more out of this Congress.

Now it would appear that a right-wing dictatorship constitutes a better bulwark against a left takeover than any fumbling, inept or graft-ridden elected government it replaces. That is considered definitely true in the most recent switches in the most recent switches in public, El Salvador, Honduras and Ecuador.

So, it is privately agreed by our diplomats, there is a definite gain in one sense by having a country, in which illiteracy and poverty are the norm, run efficiently by a military junta.

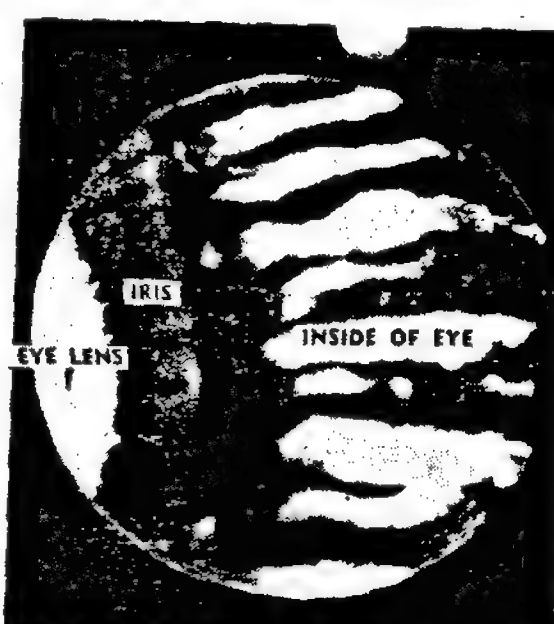

This business of making the world safe for democracy—Woodrow Wilson's lofty words in 1917—in fact, constituted only the foolish thinking that soft-headed alone dreamers still are able to do.

Why, for example, the hard-headed diplomats point out, should the State Department fret about the impact of what is now happening in South America? Don't we support never high-handed government capable of running Laos, South Nam, Pakistan or Afghanistan?

There is no argument that there are certain frustrating problems connected with the rise of dictatorship in our own hemisphere back in that connection, the demands in Congress for the administration order war to the Dominican Republic

We are horrified at Kennedy's approval of the wheat sale to Russia.

The Constitution defines treason as "giving aid and comfort to our enemies."

Webster defines enemy as "one hostile to another; one who seeks the overthrow or failure of that to which he is opposed."

Certainly no one can argue that Communism is not "hostile" to us and that its announced purpose is to overthrow capitalism (us) "to which they are opposed."

Surely bailing them out of the economic trouble created by their slave state with the sale of wheat and other accommodations is giving them aid and comfort.

How, then, can you escape the conclusion that the sale of wheat to Russia, inviting Tito to be the first guest at the Blair House, saluting Ben Bella and other such accommodations are not treason? Isn't there some way we could bring these people who would thus betray us to the bar of justice to answer for treason?

Sincerely,

Seven Ways To Make Love Last

ZURICH (WNS)—Now that teen-age marriages are becoming common in Europe, Dr. Evelyn Meier, 37, has been holding marriage seminars for high-school and college girls.

"The major problem is to make love last," she said, and cited seven common errors of wives that kill happiness:

1. To be possessive. "It's a charming trait on the honeymoon, but a husband wants some freedom later."
2. To be egotistical. "Don't talk about yourself, and how clever or smart you are. Talk about him."
3. To act the boss. "Never order your husband around, especially when others are present. He will feel humiliated and hurt."
4. To demand your own way. "Don't invite only your friends, see only your family, go only to the theater or restaurant you prefer."
5. To complain. "It may be natural for you to complain about your jobs and your lot in life, but husbands detest that and really can't help much."
6. To become indifferent to your appearance and manners. "Dress your best and act your best for your husband. Friends and strangers are not half as important as he is."
7. To criticize, tease or make fun of hubby. "You have got to keep building him up, not tearing him down. Polish his rose-colored glasses, don't break them."

Hunters' Cries Forerunner To Language

WASHINGTON (NANA)—In the beginning men were just dumb beasts, like all other animals. They developed language only when they became hunters of big game.

This hypothesis is advanced by Dr. Ashley Montagu, well-known anthropologist, in a report to the American Medical Association.

"In running and the excitement of the chase, Dr. Montagu says, 'there would be a strong tendency towards violent expulsion of air, which could readily be converted into a meaningful cry or yell. All that is necessary is the repetition and imitation of such sounds for them to become established as words. In this manner a simple vocabulary would come into being. This could then serve as a basis for further development.'"

Meaning To Sounds

Language probably came into formal existence when two or more individuals began to attach the same meaning to the same sounds, his report points out.

When the earliest progenitors of man were forced to take to a hunting way of life owing to deforestation of formerly thickly wooded areas, the ability to communicate by sound with fellow hunters would have had great selective advantages. It would have been highly desirable to do this by voice.

"Combined with the ability to interpret and imitate the meaningful cries of companions in the chase," the report explains, "such a combination of abilities would have had a high survival value. The development of intelligence and speech would have gone hand in hand with each other."

Single-Minded

NEW YORK (WNS)—Three clubs have been formed here for single girls with a single purpose. One is for girls who wish to meet only unmarried doctors; one searches out single psychologists and analysts; a third concentrates on unattached scientists. Membership is $25 a year. Said Sophie Speiser, the lady in charge: "I'm not too eager to beat the drums. I've been getting all the members I want."

WORLD ECHOES

NEW YORK (NANA)—Humorous items from the world press:

B.B. Second to De Gaulle

Most recent polling indicate that the subjects most interesting to most Frenchmen this fall are Gen. De Gaulle, Brigitte Bardot and horse racing. High prices currently discussed by most government officials come in only fifth, after the perennially popular subject: the weather. (Le Provençal, Marseille, France)

Forbidden For Communists

The first gambling casino is a Communist country will be opened on the Dalmatian coast in Yugoslavia. It will open with one director, eight croupiers and a bankroll of $40,000. Only foreigners will be allowed to gamble, because gambling is considered there to be the exclusive perdition of capitalists.

(Tiroler Tageszeitung, Innsbruck, Austria)

Off-Season Brush Off

Hotels in Innsbruck post their room rates openly for the public to see. The signs list season rates and off-season rates. But below them is a warning: "This year the season will begin on Jan. 1 and end on Dec. 31."

(Neue Zeit, Graz, Austria)

Unaccustomed Duty

Charles Priest, retiring after 40 years as a customs inspector, reported that his strangest request came from a lady who asked, "As long as you're going through my bags, will you look for my house keys which I've lost?" Added Priest, "And would you believe it, I found them!"

(Nouvelle Gazette, Charleroi, Belgium)

Heroic Disguise

The stronger sex likes to wear medals, which indicate heroism, and hates to wear hearing aids, which suggest a physical weakness. German ear specialists have found a way to capitalize on this fact: their new hearing aids look like medals and are worn as medals.

(Süddeutsche Zeitung, Munich)

Decline Of A Man

An order from the prefect of police will forbid sandwich-men from carrying their advertising billboards in the best and busiest sections of Paris. Now making only 45 cents an hour, the sandwichmen fear smaller pay under the new restrictions. "As it is, this sandwich barely nourishes me," said sandwich-man Jules Dument. "With the police biting at me, I'll end up barely a crumb."

(Liberation, Paris)

Animal License

Jean Le Corre applied for a hunting license in Cleuziou. Since he was not at home to receive it, the postman slipped it under his door. Unknown animals ripped the envelop and license to ribbons before Le Corre got home. The hunting season may be over before he gets another license and can try to get his revenge.

Drive-In Devotion

Paroli, the Italian architect, will appeal to Sunday drivers who don't want to miss church services by building a highway church for motorists at Carvazano, near Venice. It will be dedicated to the Madonna of the Parkways, and worshipers can drive into the building in their cars.

John Lovetere, Big Giant Tackle, Gets Pre-Game Jitters

By MILTON GROSS

NEW YORK (NANA)—Each day, a few hours before a Giants' football game, John Lovetere is certain to come knocking on Dr. Francis Sweeney's door to ask for a tranquilizer.

Dr. Sweeney hands a pill to the 285-pound defensive tackle, and Lovetere invariably says: "Give me two, doc."

"Why two?" Sweeney says. "One should be enough."

"The other's for Mo," says Lovetere, meaning Dick Modzelewski, a Giants' veteran defense man, who never is.

"I need something to relax me," says the newest Giant, who may be one of the strongest men in the league. "If I don't get it I walk around like a zombie before a game."

Looking at Lovetere, who came from the Rams in trade for large Roscoe Grier, a must wonder what could disturb this giant of a man, who might lift 520 pounds from a one press. It is the same feeling you get with any of these studs, who earn their pay on the football field, but each has something that sets his nerves on edge.

Johnny's case, it is one of the best football backgrounds of the game. For instance, the pro will list Lovetere as coming from Compton Junior College. However, has been trying to get the Giants to drop affiliation from the program. Reasoning is simple and direct. "I didn't go there but a couple weeks. I didn't have any college. I just played a couple games on account of the scholarship."

Vanishing Scholarship

Way this dark curly-haired, 28-year-old tells the story, it is the case of the missing scholarship.

"They ran out of money or something so I just had to quit," he said. "I had an apartment and a wife and a little girl. They promised they were going to take care of the whole thing. I needed the money to live, but they didn't. They probably thought I'd stay on without it, but I didn't. I couldn't afford to go to school."

At that time Lovetere had married his wife and five-year-old daughter Denise, back in Tennessee. He had them and took a job in a mill as a laborer.

He was making about $1.10 an hour and did it for three weeks. His father-in-law helping out, the Rams got in touch with him for a tryout," John

There was this inexperienced who had played only at Mount High in Los Angeles when in the Army at Fort Bell, Ky., where the Rams had scouted him. In the Rams condition they would have taken anybody and Lovetere says he was able to stick, "only because I got a few breaks and I guess I was hungry."

He didn't just make it in the pros. He was the team's rookie of the year and earned the MVP defensive awards in 1960 and '61. In 1960, he personally blocked five punts, which may be an NFL record. But when Harland Sware took over as coach, John's troubles began.

Pre-Season Injury

The tackle was hurt in a pre-season game against the Giants, recovered, played against the Colts in the season's opener and then against the Bears.

"I hurt my ankle, but kept on playing and I had a bad game," said John, "and I never did play again."

There are two versions of what followed next. One is told by Sware, a former Giant, himself. On a plane from a subsequent game after several weeks of inactivity, Lovetere could stand it no longer.

Sware came along the aisle and Johnny blocked it with his bulk. He is the kind of man whose biceps are larger than most peoples' thighs. He wanted to know why he wasn't playing and threatened to poke the coach.

"You know how a guy looks when he's really going to take a swing at you?" the coach said. "Well, that's the way this guy looked."

"I never threatened him," said Lovetere. "I just never got a reason for why I wasn't playing. I know he told the coaches I threatened him, but all he told me was to get off my chest what was bugging, so I told him."

Draws Fire

The Tuesday following the incident when all pro teams get together for the first time after a game, Sware told Lovetere he was being fined $250.

"Everything was all right until that Tuesday," said John, "but I guess I hurt his feelings and he had a delayed reaction. He said nothing to me on the plane about it and what I couldn't understand was if he didn't blame me for how I felt, why should he fine me? I must be the first one in the league to be fined for wanting to play."

He Fits In OK

The Giants have been giving Johnny the opportunity. They wondered at first how the newcomer would fit in with Mo, Sam Huff, Jim Katcavage and Andy Robustelli on the defense in the place of Grier. Apparently they are not wondering any more.

"Over there," said Johnny, meaning the Rams, "it was each guy for himself. Here you don't stand alone. Here you know what it is to win. Over there I never knew it."

Young Ideas

By DICK YOUNG

LOS ANGELES (N.Y. News)—This will slay you. The Dodgers are looking for a pitcher.

Buzzy Bavasi, vice president in charge of Dodger needs and deals, stated in a look-ahead chat, that he considers such an addition his primary purpose during the long winter of negotiations.

"I need another starting pitcher; I know that," he said. "That will be the only major change we will make. I can't tell now if he will come from our system, or in a deal with another club, but I know we'll get one."

This from the bossman of the team that has just given the Yankees four runs in four World Series games.

"You can win a World Series with three pitchers," said Bavasi, "but you have to go into a pennant race with four solid starters."

Last winter, the Dodgers changed their No. 4 starter. They traded Stan Williams to the Yankees and obtained Miller from the Mets. Miller did well as a spot starter plus reliever but now is regarded more as a reliever—the "long man" who can give three or four innings and do it two or three days at a time.

Failing to come up with the deal they want, the Dodgers will try to develop the new starter from among their own youngsters. Outstanding candidates named by Bavasi are Pete Richert, Nick Wilhite, Joe Moeller and Phil Ortega.

Richert, a lefty from Long Island, did some fine late season work after coming back from the Spokane farm. Wilhite had a mid-season shot with the big club, but wasn't quite ready and wound up back in PCL. Moeller and Ortega both showed well at Spokane.

New Reliever, Too

It is likely that Bavasi will attempt to find another relief pitcher to back up Ron Peranoski, No. 1 finisher in the National League.

The Dodgers also will give two young infielders shots at jobs. Bart Shirley, a good gloveman, will compete with incumbent Ken McNallen at third base. Pee-wee Oliver, who failed to stick last Spring, will make another try at the age-old effort to move Junior Gilliam off second base—and he'd better be better than good.

"I admire Gilliam from all angles," said Walt Alston. The Dodger manager meant as a player and as a person. "In the 12 years I had him, here and at Montreal, he never complained or moaned to me. When you play him, he does a helluva job; when you don't play him, he never complains."

Leg To Go?

That's about it for the future of the world's champs at the moment—except for one thing. Danny Ozark, organization man who last year managed at Spokane, probably will be moved up to replace Leo Durocher as Dodger coach.

And Leo? He'll set the world on fire some place. If you don't think so, just ask him.

A Sad Game

A friend of ours, after watching Alabama murder Tennessee last Saturday at Legion Field, commented:

"That was such a sad game even the seats were in tiers."

ALL IN SPORT

"Go in an' hit 'em with the same play! They'll never dream anybody would be that stupid!"

Mets Hope To Land Hodges When Casey Does Retire

By DAVID CONDON

(Chicago Tribune Press Service) CHICAGO — Whenever Casey Stengel does decide to retire the New York Mets hope to summon back Gil Hodges. Gil, now doing penance as manager of the Washington Senators, is one of the most popular athletes ever to perform in the New York area. He is an Indiana boy, though, and attended St. Joseph College.

Charles Callahan, Notre Dame sports publicity director, says there is one thing about his craft — it is a stepping stone to bigger jobs. "Look at Pete Rozelle, commissioner of the National Football League," illustrates Callahan. "Rozelle was in charge of sports publicity with the University of San Francisco when Joe Kuharich had that great football team out there. Look at Ford Frick, the czar of baseball. Besides his sports writing career, Frick had a stretch doing publicity for the National League. And Walter Kennedy, the director right here at Notre Dame."

Wouldn't the San Francisco 49ers like to come up with Y. A. Tittle as their coach for 1964?

Warning To Baseball

If baseball's deep thinkers took time to scan the sports news, they might have been shocked into the realization that they aren't running the only game in town. The World Series, matching the Dodgers and Yankees, was on free home TV . . . But 80,264 paid to see Minnesota engage Army's football forces. A respectable 51,862 saw the Northwestern and Illinois duel, Michigan and Navy drew 55,877, and down in Bloomington, Ind., they packed in an unprecedented 42,208.

Apparently there are several hundreds of thousands of sports fans who can get along without the World Series. They proved it again by jamming the pro football arenas.

And we wonder what rating service will tell us which drew the greater audience in areas where both pro football and the World Series were on television?

Finley Gaining Favor

There seems to be increasing sentiment in favor of Charlie Finley's proposal to open the World Series on a week-end, to play some of the games at night. Dodger owner Walter O'Malley endorses this idea. O'Malley smells more money.

It certainly would be a break for the fans and the school kids who can't take off on week-day afternoons. And it is about time baseball began doing a little more for the fans. At World Series time, you see absolute disdain for the fan who supports the team during the regular season.

The poor sucker, and his ticket money, are welcome at the box office from opening day until closing day. But who ends up with the World Series tickets? The business executives, the movie stars, the politicians, and an army of others with clout, get the tickets; and you can bet that more than half of them haven't been in the ball park since the last World Series.

Half the folks who buy World Series tickets have no more interest in baseball than in the Moscow ballet. But it is prestige to be able to come up with tickets and to be seen in the arena.

Meanwhile, the sucker fan has to settle for television. Or maybe, perhaps, baseball may have lost a fan forever.

The baseball leaders, in their blindness, figure that the answer to attendance slumps is the transfer of a franchise. That's ridiculous. Give the fans a better break, and they'll get them back.

Placement Service Offers Personalized Help

"We deal only in people at Placement Service and not in numbers," says Miss Nadine Carlee who heads up the new Birmingham employment agency.

This is her way of saying her company views all clients as people with problems with special needs or persons with special talents.

"Our interest is to place qualified people in jobs where they will be most useful and best paid, or the many companies who use our services, we are determined to send them only applicants who have been carefully screened by one or more of our account executives," Miss Carlee says.

Placement Service is staffed to handle applicants at any job level from laborer, white collar worker or someone at the executive management level.

Miss Carlee is assisted by Mrs. Mildred Falls. Both are natives of this area and active in business, social and religious fields.

Placement Service is a home-operated and home-owned company and is not a part of any national organization, according to Miss Carlee.

Placement Service is located on the sixth floor of the City Federal Building (formerly Comer Building).

Miss Carlee invites persons looking for job transfers to come by for private interviews. All are confidential.

She says no fee is charged for registering with the firm and no person is under obligation to accept a job unless the job found is just what they want.

Many jobs needing someone to fill them are now listed with the firm in virtually all categories, Miss Carlee says.

The firm takes pride in the fact that they have a testing program for typing, dictation and specially devised aptitude tests. Such tests are given at the request of employers.

Also available at Placement

Service are other screening and testing programs and they will arrange for the services of industrial psychologist.

New Killer, Fights Japanese Beetle

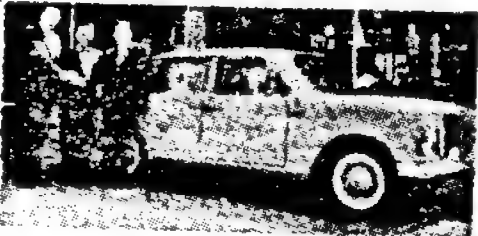

WASHINGTON (NANA)—Effective control of the crop-menacing Japanese beetle at last is in sight.

A way to mass produce bacterial spores that cause the fatal "milky disease" of these pests now is being worked out by a team of department of agricultural scientists at the department's northern research laboratory at Peoria, Ill.

Now in its fourth year, the study shows progress even though the disease bacteria require a complex environment and are difficult to grow outside the beetle grub. The department scientists have succeeded in growing cells in a liquid medium, but inducing these cells to form spores has proved a tougher problem.

Up to 1,000,000,000 bacteria per cubic millimeter of the liquid medium have been produced and two per cent of these have produced spores which will survive in soil and cause the disease when eaten by beetle grubs.

One of the most conclusive automotive economy achievements ever! That's the story behind the San Francisco-New York odyssey of the Mercedes-Benz 190 Diesel that covered the widely varied route across desert, mountains and plains at an amazing average fuel cost of only $0.0086 per mile. Carroll drove the straight stock model Mercedes-Benz automobile at an average speed of 50.48 mph. This speed is 25% greater than the usual economy run averages. Carroll had high praise for his motor car, stating that in addition to the amazing economy, the automobile performed in true Mercedes-Benz fashion, delivering exceptional comfort, handling and performance throughout his journey. In his final report, Carroll summed up his findings, "The 3,998-mile trip proves beyond all question that the Mercedes-Benz 190 Diesel is the ideal high-mileage luxury transportation."

U. S. Policy Makes Latins Fair Game For Reds

Not long ago a former member of the Roosevelt Administration, who has lived several years since then in Latin America, was asked about the various military take-overs in some of the nations down there. In reply, he said, contrary to an opinion quite common in the United States, these actions of the military were absolutely necessary to the maintenance of stable government, public welfare, and order.

The higher ranks in the military establishments in those countries have been recruited from the more enlightened families. They are for the most part essentially patriotic individuals who do not seek power for power's sake, but seek to prevent demagoguery,

Bubbly Flowed, Two Partygoers Sail With Ship

NEW YORK (N.Y. News)—Two young women, who were so deafened by the popping of champagne corks that they didn't hear the call "all ashore that's going ashore" returned from Europe recently aboard the liner Queen Elizabeth.

Both attended a going away party for a friend Sept. 25, dozed off after downing the bubbly, and woke up at sea.

"I don't have any head for drinking," admitted Mrs. Donia Carey, 29, of West Falmouth, Mass., who took the unplanned trip with her 11-month-old son, Seth. "I didn't have any breakfast. The whole thing was silly and unbelievable."

The other sleeping beauty was Miss Diana MacKown, 26, of Pittsburgh. "I'm off champagne for a while," said Diana. "But I want you to know I'm still fond of it," she said.

Mrs. Carey, who studied singing at Yale Music School, said husband, Frank, a Marine biologist at Woods Hole, Mass., seemed pretty philosophical.

"He told me to make the best of it and to try to see something of France," Mrs. Carey said.

The young mother was given special permission to get off the ship at Cherbourg and went to Paris, but she spent so much time sitting around government offices getting her papers straightened out that she didn't see much of the town.

Miss MacKown, who was graduated from the school of architecture and design at Yale, did not leave the ship at all.

Both women had been seeing off a girl they had known at Yale when the Elizabeth sailed away.

TIME ANALYZED

ZURICH, Switzerland (WNS)—Michele Moresi, who has traveled to every European capital gathering material for a new book, "Modern Families," reports that the average European housewife with three children spends one hour, 48 minutes a day cleaning house; one hour, 42 minutes preparing meals; one hour, 12 minutes sewing and mending, and one hour, 12 minutes washing and ironing.

NEWS BREAKS GENTLY

FLORENCE, Italy (WNS)—The scale in the women's health salon of Dante Bucci has a small panel that lights up when the weight registered is over 125 pounds. It reads: "With our apologies."

chaos, and the spread of communism.

This informed opinion, it should be noted, comes from a man who was frequently under attack here for his left-wing views. But personal contacts with the realities of so-called democracy in semi-developed countries have modified his views.

Three Major Errors

Three major errors by the government of the United States have not only increased the danger of Communist control in Latin America but have substantially encouraged military leaders to protect themselves against Communism.

The first of these errors was the abrogation of the Platt Amendment by the Roosevelt Administration. This was done because it was assumed that the rule of Batista would make it unnecessary for the United States to intervene in Cuba. This proved to be a very foolish estimate of what might happen after Batista.

Next, during the Eisenhower Administration, Castro was helped to gain power because of the blunders of subordinates in the State Department. Despite the protests of two of Eisenhower's ambassadors to Cuba, to the "fourth floor" in the State Department Castro was a benign reformer. Now we know that this was a tragedy like the misjudgment of Mao Tse-tung.

Third and finally, the Kennedy Administration, by its misjudgment not only of Castro but the designs of the Soviet government, has abrogated the Monroe Doctrine after nearly a century and a half.

What has been the effect of these successive exhibitions of American weakness and miscalculation?

Encouraged Communists

They have encouraged Communists to believe that Latin American countries are fair game for their designs. They are at liberty to regard the United States not as a paper tiger but as a Ferdinand the bull, with power but with no disposition to use it.

They have served notice on the substantial people in those countries that if they are to be saved they must do it themselves.

Hence, a disbelief in our understanding and capacity for action has not only created the chaos and corruption of allegedly popular governments, but has aroused the military to take things into their own hands.

The naivete which permitted the past mistakes still seems to possess official Washington and commentators. These people consistently speak of military take-overs as the "overthrow" of "democracies." If they used the word democracy as a synonym of republican government they would still be wrong. For while the constitutions of most Latin American nations are modeled on ours with the executive and legislative branches coordinated and balanced one against the other, these limitations are scarcely ever observed in practice.

What prevails in Latin America is executive dictatorship, either under a socialist or Communist-tinged president or under a military chief. Considering the origins of these two types, the military seems to be less susceptible to Communist influence. And our lavish outlays of money have little effect upon the creation of stable governments. (A Bell-McClure Syndicate Feature).

Sylvester For Today

By ROBERT SYLVESTER

(Copyright: 1963: By Chicago Tribune-New York News Synd., Inc.)

NEW YORK.—You're getting older if you can remember when milk came in cans and beer didn't. Men wore full length one-piece bathing suits with big holes on the sides of the rib cage. Tenth Avenue was called Death Avenue and railroad trains ran in it. You played stickball in practically car-less city streets. You could buy any color automobile you wanted as long as it was black. You had regularly scheduled seasons for marbles, checkers, chestnuts, tops, rubber band guns, orange crate scooters, and tree house buildings. Lipstick came in flat, round boxes and was called lip rouge and tasted like candle wax. Ice cream parlors smelled of vanilla ice cream and movie theatres smelled of celluloid. If you rubbed a sore muscle with omega oil. If you took cod liver oil. If you made a pair of skis out of barrel staves.

You're getting older if you can remember technocracy. If you owned a short overcoat called a reefer or wore a muffler called a tippet, a Scotch cap, felt shoes inside overshoes, or relaxed reading in a Morris chair. If you can remember the names of all four Rover boys. If you put a barrel of sap beer to age in the cellar for harvest time. If your mother worried about your contracting quincy sore throat. If the butcher gave you a free piece of calf liver for your cat. If you complained about wearing knickers to school.

Older and Older

You're getting older if you smoked a Cubes, Hassan, or Home Run cigarette. If you remember grandpa having a coach dog trained to run under the carriage. If you ever took Duffy's pure malt tonic or Father Doan's pills. If your idea of having a wonderfully exciting time was to hang around the blacksmith shop or the fire house. If you can remember how you used to pull down the gas lever, shove up the spark lever, crank the Ford, and then run madly back to reverse the levers. If you bought a dozen crullers or rolls at the baker's and he threw in an extra one to make a "baker's dozen." If you wore a big button saying "Chicken Inspector" or "I Love My Wife, But Oh You Kid" or "23 Skidoo."

You're getting older if you remember when the grocer's coal bin was outside the store and you filled your pail for a dime. If the richest man in your town had a locomobile or a Pierce Arrow car and if you felt almost as rich if your father could afford to buy a sporty Flint touring car. You bought five cakes of yeast for a dime so your mother could make bread. If you washed with big, ragged cakes of homemade Yaglos soap which were made in flat cans out of lye and saved fat. If you went to bed with a hot soapstone wrapped in a towel on your chest. If you remember when Jerry Lama was "King of the Musica Saw" on primitive radio.

Recalls Some Dances

You're getting older if you danced the Balconades, the Twinkletoes, the Bunny Hug, the Grapevine, or the Pivot. Or if you competed in a public waltz contest. If you played an Edison phonograph with half-inch thick records. If you used a hot salt bag against the side of your face for carache. If you turned the handle of the ice cream freezer. If you set the oatmeal to cook slowly all night on the back of the stove. If you bought bacon by the slab instead of the the Hinterssoiser Traverse. But he and two companions were swept down in an avalanche. The fourth member of the party, Toni Kurz, had lowered himself to within 50 feet of his rescuers when a knot jammed in a cleat. He died swinging.

But the challenge had been voiced. Now the bravest climbers in Europe began to slip into Grindelwald to study the Eiger. Most of them were poor and unheralded—clerks, masons, students, factory workers. But practically all were master rock men. Some came by motor bike. Some, too poor to afford sleeping rooms, camped in the meadow. Karl Winter started up the Eiger with five Swiss francs in his pocket. Only a few exhibitionists (who rarely got above the Ice Horse) boasted of their intentions. In the pre-dawn hours the good men just quietly left for the mountain.

AND IN 1938 the North Face was climbed. Andreas Heckmair, Ludwig Vörg, Fritz Kasperek and Heinrich Harrer made it in four days, and Harrer's book, "The White Spider," is a mountaineering classic.

Nine years later two Frenchmen got up, a month later three Germans. With each success the interest increased. The year 1952 was "the good year." Nineteen men reached the top.

Then the mountain turned. In July '53, Korber and Vass were swept away during a storm and the next month Wyss and Gonda fell from the summit ice-slope. In '56 it was Sohnel and Moosmüller and in '57 the Corti disaster. One body, held by a belt, swung grotesquely for two years before it was cut down. But still they come, and last month a young Swiss went up all by himself in 30 hours.

Why?

THE SAFE wisecracks at the valley telescopes talk of "thirst for glory." The amateur psychiatrists suspect that these climbers are misfits trying to prove that they are conquerors. But the face of the Eiger seems to be no place for neurotics, and in their normal lives climbers rarely display personality problems.

So why, again?

Heinrich Harrer tries an answer:

"I do not think any one of us who climbed that 6,000-foot bastion of rock and ice was at any time in fear of his life. But after our safe return we felt more conscious of the privilege of having been allowed to live. The Eiger's face helped me to believe in life when all the circumstances seemed most hostile to life itself."

Or, as old Kurt Maix put it: "Climbing is the most royal irrationality out of which Man has been able to fashion the highest personal values."

I'll never understand it. But after a look at the Eiger I'll never sneer again. (Copyright 1963, General Features Corp.)

slice... eaten sour milk chocolate cake... set a pan of hot fudge in the snow to cool.

You're getting older if you can remember when women needed "rats" and "buns" and "switches" for their hair-dos. If you swiped potatoes to roast in an open fire. If you still know how to patch an inner tube with a scraper, tube of glue, and a round patch. If you had to share your roller skates, you keeping one and giving your pal the other. If Ken Strong writes you a note to tell you that Ken Strong III is a star little league pitcher. If all of a sudden you can't remember more things about being young.

GOP-Prepared Booklet Cuts Pre-Campaign Fog

By VERA GLASER

WASHINGTON (NANA)—Republican leaders are privately feasting on a new document specially prepared for their guidance in the coming presidential year.

When word of this campaign goodie gets around, voters and professionals of every political stripe will be on the prowl for copies.

It is the only known bottled-down, updated, and mentally digestible version of the complex system used by 50 different states to select delegates to the 1964 presidential nominating conventions.

Even this short-order fare adds up to 23 single-spaced pages of political meat.

It was compiled under the direction of Dr. William Prendergast, research director of the Republican National Committee. For weeks, his staff has been cramming state election laws, surveying secretaries of state, and corresponding with GOP officials around the country.

"We undertook the job to clarify procedures leading up to the Republican convention in San Francisco," Dr. Prendergast says, "but the booklet contains primary, filing, legal and other information useful to both parties."

Frequent Puzzlers

Every four years politicians get out the aspirin bottle, straighten their bifocals, and study the fine print for answers to these and scores of other questions:

How are delegates apportioned among states? Which states hold primaries? What are the dates?

Stand Against

earlier than most that their poor, dumb, hardluck parents either couldn't or wouldn't make it.

Pressure Mount

THE PRESSURES to be an adequate Santa Claus to one's children are terrific on all parents. The old idea of giving something to the children, in remembrance of the gifts taken to the Baby Jesus, long ago got out of bounds. A gift or two, offered in love, even offered anonymously in the name of the mythical St. Nick, was a tender way to observe the Holy Day.

But somehow the whole thing got away from us. Children started making lists and writing letters detailing their wants. The stores abound in Santas, fired for the purpose of encouraging the young ones in their exercise of the gimme's.

Parents not only give to please their children but to make certain that the range and cost of the Christmas morning haul is extensive enough not to shame the child before his peers.

I heard of a 16-year-old the other day who is already warning her parents that "all the girls" in her class are getting convertibles for Christmas.

Meanwhile, the agencies which could be concentrating on long-range problems of health and education, gird themselves for the December toy drive—for the community-wide effort to make sure that Santa leaves not a single stocking empty. I wonder if we haven't created for ourselves a monster and called him Santa Claus.

Are delegates legally bound by primary results? Is consent of a presidential candidate required to enter his name? Which states select delegates by convention? Which use other systems?

This year Prendergast is ready

Lane Names Finley In Funds Suit

(Chicago Tribune Press Service)

CHICAGO—Frank Lane, former general manager of the Cleveland Indians, St. Louis Cardinals, Chicago White Sox, and Kansas City Athletics baseball teams and Chicago Zephyrs professional basketball team, filed a $144,166.60 suit against the Charles O. Finley Company, owner of the Athletics, in federal district court here.

In his suit, Lane, 65, who lives in St. Petersburg, Fla., contends through his attorney, Charles D. Stein, that the amount is owed him by Finley in a contract signed Feb. 15, 1961, when Lane joined the Athletics.

According to the contract, Lane was to receive $25,000 a year from Feb. 15, 1961, through Dec. 31, 1964, as general manager of the team. He also was to receive $25,000 a year from Dec. 31, 1964, through Dec. 31, 1968, as a consultant.

Fired By Finley

Lane was fired by Finley on Aug. 20, 1961, and received a salary of $5,000 per year until May 7, 1962, when he joined the Zephyrs. Stein contends Lane has received no salary from the Athletics since that date. Lane left the Zephyrs, who moved to Baltimore, on April 30, 1963.

Stein contends that no effort was made by Kansas City to buy up the Lane contract and that no reason was given for the firing. He added that Lane would like to bring the case to court so that the reason for his firing would be made public.

ceive the type of schooling that best fits their needs.

The same individual learns differently at different times and with different teachers. Some students profit most from lectures, others profit from small group discussions. In the elementary school, the report holds, students should have an opportunity to explore all of these approaches.

For years educators assumed that a classroom group of 30 was an ideal size. The egg-crate design of school rooms supported such an assumption. Today, many educators are breaking out of this concept. Some classes may be 30. Others 45, still others five. A drastic 8-thinking in classroom size is essential.

Other Revisions

In addition to nongrading and team teaching, the schools are urged to introduce television, tape recordings, teaching machines, language laboratories, films and filmstrips.

To function properly in today's world, pupils should know about communism and how to combat it. Although the more intensive study of communism may be delayed until the senior high school, the topic should receive attention in the elementary school, the study maintains.

with facts on the barrelhead. His booklet, regrettably, does not make things as easy as pie—only less painful.

While the delegate booklet was simmering, his researchers whipped up another batch of useful election statistics—this one a roundup of Republican and Democratic results since 1948 in the 15 states and District of Columbia which hold primaries.

No Democratic Plans

Dr. Prendergast's opposite number on the Democratic side, tracked down at his own party lair, reported no immediate plans to cook up something for his partisans to devour. "We'll probably get out a table some time soon," he said.

It would not be the first time Dr. Prendergast and his staff have serviced voters of both parties.

In his Pulitzer-prize-winning "Making of the President 1960," Author Theodore White, a self-styled Democrat, wrote:

"Over the years I have found the research staff of the Republican national committee the finest source of quick accurate tabulation and analysis of returns in Washington."

"It is remarkable that the high command of the Republican Party, which supports the finest research staff in Washington, should pay so little attention to their researchers, while the Democratic National Committee, full of men who love politics, should have so primitive a research staff and resources."

to force the return of exiled president Juan Bosch?

Castro Still Sore Toe

How could the Kennedy administration dare do this? How could it use our armed forces to boot out a rightist military junta when it allows Red dictator Castro to stay on in Cuba?

And for that matter, this government long ago tied its hands on all such hemispheric problems. In the good old days we would simply land the Marines, install any old kind of government capable of ruling and promising to keep on good relations with the U.S.A.

Now, since 1947 and as a direct result of the "good neighbor" policy of FDR's secretary of state Cordell Hull, we are pledged not to intervene anywhere unless such a move is sanctioned by the 21-nation organization of American States. Even the missile-crisis blockade of Cuba had to be okayed by this body before it was ordered.

Just because we are powerless on our own to strike back at South American dictators does not mean, however, that the State Department is given a license to apologize for them and find a silver lining in their rise to power.

Especially the kind of argument, now being peddled brazenly around, that these new military regimes are not like those which seized power 30 years ago. They are described as "civilized," composed of men who recognize the necessity of eventual return to constitutional government and have the interests of the people at heart.

This is pure baloney. What is even worse is the effort to implant the idea that a dictatorship represents a democratic gain, as there is a transitional stage in a country's movement toward popular government, and a junta helps in this development.

Junior Prefers Chewing Gum: Surrealism Is Like Giraffe

By DOROTHY McCARDLE
WASHINGTON (NANA)—Emperor Haile Selassie is a little man who came only up to President Kennedy's shoulder, and even the President is not a tall man. But the Emperor is regarded the world over as a giant of a man when it comes to courage and leadership. And add to all this, a complete understanding of what makes a woman happy.

His gift to First Lady Jacqueline Kennedy brought out all her exuberant thanks. It was a full-length leopard coat, fashioned without collars and cuffs, and lined with white satin.

He presented it to the First Lady the day she invited him to stop by the White House for tea.

Mrs. Kennedy wore the coat out into the rose garden when she escorted His Majesty downstairs to see the President.

As she twirled about in the exotic coat under the hot afternoon sun, she exclaimed:

"Look, Jack, he gave it to me... he gave it to me!"

"Well, I wondered why you were wearing a fur coat in the garden," the President said with a smile.

Three-year-old John F. Kennedy Jr. proved himself to be all American boy that afternoon of the Emperor of Ethiopia's visit in the rose garden.

Like a royal magician, His Majesty produced gifts for both Caroline and John Jr. For the President's daughter, there was a hand-carved figure of an Ethiopian girl. For John Jr., an ancient Ethiopian soldier, carrying a lance and a spear.

"Does anybody have any chewing gum?" was John Jr.'s wistful remark.

The youngster's mamma was embarrassed, but everyone else laughed.

Nobody had any gum!

Surrealism Like Giraffe

Who ever heard of a giraffe being a surrealist creature?

Well, he is, according to the ambassador of Belgium, Louis Scheyven. The ambassador opened an exhibition of "contemporary painting in Belgium" at the Corcoran Gallery of Art last week. He displayed wit and wisdom on a subject that baffles most people. He understands modern art, and he can joke about it.

He pinpointed surrealism which has a few other million people completely buffaloed—or should we say "giraffed."

He had just toured the gallery with a couple of hundred dressed-up leaders of Washington who looked in astonishment at the canvases on the wall. They had gazed together upon one work of Rene Magritte. This showed an oversized pocket comb, standing upright on an undersized bed, with a towering wine glass dwarfing a china cupboard.

"There is nothing more surrealist than nature," said the ambassador. "A giraffe is a surrealist creature, so are many exotic birds. But we are used to them, and they offer no surprises."

"What the surrealist wants is to surprise and enchant us."

This brought an understanding laugh.

Next he tackled abstract art.

"Abstract art is related to classical art, as jazz is related to classical music," he said. "And here I hope I do not scandalize those who believe in Mozart or those who put their faith in Duke Ellington."

They got another laugh.

The fascinating group of Belgian paintings by 18 of Belgium's "most modern artists" will be on view here until Dec. 1. It will then make a tour of other American cities—Denver, San Francisco, Los Angeles and St. Louis.

The only trouble is that those cities won't have the Belgian ambassador to explain it all to them!

French Folk Say Junior Must Get Soup At Lunch

PARIS (WNS)—School lunch rooms in France are becoming so crowded that some children can spend only a half hour at the table—a disaster for the French.

In many Paris districts the standard lunch for children includes six courses—hors d'oeuvres, soup, meat and potatoes, vegetables, cheese or salad, and dessert. Students frequently bring some fresh fruit from home to top off this midday meal.

But with the crowding, some schools have cut out the soup and cheese courses. Parents are complaining bitterly that their children are not getting enough to eat.

It's A Woman's World

Women's News Service
Whether you approve is beside the point: It's a woman's world and here's how it's spinning.

FONTAINEBLEAU, France (WNS)—For weeks, hitchhikers complained of "a man in a blue car" who gave them lifts, then held them up and stole their money and luggage. The man, Albert Thibault, 41, has finally been turned in to the police by two women hikers, Oraa Yosha and Bina Feiner. "He didn't know we are well-trained soldiers in the Israeli Army," explained Bina.

PARIS (WNS)—Sign at the entrance of the Inno Supermarket near the Gare Montparnasse: "All purchases made by husbands alone on Saturday mornings can be exchanged (or money refunded) by wives the same afternoon."

ZURICH, Switzerland (WNS)—When schoolteacher Elizabeth Vaucher assigned 9-year-old students to write compositions on "How To Improve Daily Life," she received this paper from Heidi

Kosch: "My father complains about business, my mother about housework, and I about school. Life would be improved if my father did the housework, my mother came to school, and I went to the office."

LINGEN, Germany, (WNS)—Hendiette Thischer, 72, couldn't wait for the freight train blocking the road to move, so she ducked underneath it to get across. As she did, the train began to go. Quickly she jumped on the rods and rode for 25 minutes under the train before a gatekeeper spotted her and stopped it. She was unhurt and frightened that she might get in trouble with railroad authorities.

PARIS (WNS)—Jeannie Depalmas has joined her husband, Marcel, as an ace jockey at French race tracks. She stands one head taller than her mate, and wears stars instead of circles on her blouse. Commenting on her work, race horse owner Alex Weisweller said, "Women make as good jockeys as men. Moreover, they understand horses better. I intend to hire many of them."

ROME (WNS)—Francesca Bruni, who places fashion models had trouble finding a dozen Italian beauties willing to go to London for mannequin assignments. "Parents of the girls disapprove of trips to England," she said. "Their daughters never come home because Englishmen want to marry them."

PARIS (WNS)—A couture poll has revealed that French teenagers do not follow fashions introduced by Paris couturiers. "How can we?" replied Dominique Audoin, 19. "The couturiers copy what we are already wearing, particularly Yves St. Laurent."

AUGUSTA, Ga. (WNS)—Mrs. Louis T. Scharff always ends up caring for the livestock in the Augusta Players theatrical productions. In "Li'l Abner" she played Moonbeam McSwine and became nursemaid to Salomey the pig. As a production worker with "Teahouse of the August Moon," she became sifter for a goat. "And he was a spoiled goat," reported Mrs. Scharff.

Original Dixieland Played At Gas Lite Lounge

Crowds continue to jam the Gas Lite Lounge to hear Jerald Scott and his fabulous Dixieland band. The Gas Lite at 2120 Morris Avenue has the styling of an old New Orleans Jazz establishment, but with up-to-date facilities providing the most discriminating in food and beverages.

A large dance floor in French Quarter decor invites people to join in the fun as Jerald Scott and his band play some of the all-time and authentic Dixieland favorites. For those who just want to listen, here is comfort in one of the smarter supper clubs in the city.

Today the original New Orleans jazz bands are a thing of the past in most cities in the country. Birmingham has the rare privilege of hearing a band that is the true old New Orleans jazz school.

GOP Names Tandy Little To Make Primary Study

TANDY LITTLE

Republican State Executive Committee Chairman John Grenier has announced formation of a committee to report to the Republican State Executive Committee as to whether Alabama Republican candidates for statewide office in the 1964 general election will be chosen by primary or the convention system.

He named Tandy Little, Montgomery, to head the nominating method committee.

Grenier said the committee was formed at the request of the Republican Executive Committee because of "the wide interest throughout Alabama as to whether we will nominate candidates by convention or by primary. The committee will make a thorough study of the alternatives and bring its report and recommendations to the Executive Committee at the January meeting."

LITTLE, MONTGOMERY businessman, is the first Republican ever chosen to serve in the state legislature from Montgomery County, winning his seat in 1962.

In accepting the appointment from Grenier, Little said that an all-day session of the committee would probably be held in Montgomery, the date to be announced later. "All interested parties will be invited to bring their views to the attention of the committee at that time," he said. "After a full hearing and careful study, we will present our findings to the Executive Committee for its decision. We encourage those who have convictions on a nominating method to make them known to us."

Other members appointed by Grenier are Glenn Andrews, Anniston; Charles H. Chapman, Dothan; A. Ray Cox, Mobile; Joseph Farley, Birmingham; James D. Martin, Gadsden; Mrs. R. J. Miller, Mobile; Jon Will Pitts, Clanton; and Dorthen Wadsworth, Arley.

there were four or five distinct schools of Dixieland music. The first, and probably the best, was the New Orleans Dixieland. Later some of the stars from New Orleans moved to Kansas City, Chicago and New York City, starting Dixieland in each city.

In the process Jazz changed to fit the demands of the paying customers. Today there remain only two schools. They are the New Orleans type that resembles the original, and the commercial Dixieland which is played mostly by the new generation.

The Jerald Scott Dixieland band at the Gas Lite is one of the few organizations in the nation that plays the original Jazz. This band is impossible to describe. But once you hear it, you'll recognize the true sound of New Orleans Dixieland as it sounded at the height of the Jazz Era.

Gov. Brown Thinks Rights Issue Hurts JFK Politically

(Chicago Tribune Press Service) WASHINGTON—Gov. Edmund Brown of California said here that President Kennedy has been hurt politically by the civil rights issue but would win in California at present.

Brown said that in a Republican primary showdown in the state Sen. Barry Goldwater (Ariz.) would win "fairly decisively" over Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York.

Brown told reporters that his views are based on private polls he has had taken. Kennedy lost the state to former vice president Richard Nixon in 1960 by 35,000 votes.

Brown said the polls show Kennedy would carry the state, although the racial issue "hasn't been a help to him."

Brown said that on civil rights the president has taken the only course he could take.

Talk Of Future

The governor was at the White House to talk with presidential assistant Lawrence O'Brien about the illness of Sen. Clair Engle (D., Cal.). Brown told reporters they discussed "what we should do next year if he (Engle) is not able to run again."

Engle is suffering from a brain tumor. He is partly paralyzed.

"We didn't make any decision," Brown said. "But we have to know pretty soon. It takes a long time to mount a campaign."

The governor professed no interest in running for the Senate.

"I had a hard re-election campaign last year," Brown said. "I want to rest on my laurels for a while."

Re: UNKNOWN SUBJECTS; BOMBING
OF 16th STREET BAPTIST CHURCH

Efforts are continuing to attempt to locate the source of the scrap metal used in the shrapnel bomb which exploded in the streets of Birmingham on September 25, 1963. The scrap piles at the homes and garages of suspects are being checked.

All suspects in this case were surveilled on the evening of October 24, 1963, in an endeavor to learn if they would attend the Eastview Klavern #13 of the United Klans, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. Several Klansmen appeared, as well as Robert E. Chambliss. The meeting failed to take place since the man who had the key to the Klavern hall failed to show up.

Re Mobile airtel to the Bureau, 9/24/63.

Referenced airtel requested that Birmingham obtain a copy of Father EDWARD L. FOSTER's article captioned "Priest Reflects on Meeting A Mother Seeking Her Children." It was also requested that Father FOSTER be interviewed concerning any knowledge he might have concerning the bombing of the 16th Street Baptist Church.

It is noted that Father EDWARD L. FOSTER, 3160 Highland Dr., Birmingham, Ala., was previously interviewed concerning information he had of the bombing of the 16th Street Baptist Church, which is the same information contained in the article he wrote.

Chambliss apparently was referring to a meeting of the Eastview Klavern, Number 13, of the United Klans, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, which is to be held on the evening of October 30, 1963. As was previously reported, it is alleged that John W. Hall and Chambliss will endeavor to "get things straightened out." This meeting will be covered.

Chambliss was interviewed on 10/29/63 but refused to answer even routine questions. He demanded that the investigation concerning him be stopped. He was advised that the investigation of his past, present and future activities would continue to a logical conclusion with or without his cooperation.
